PREFACE.

A CCUSTOMED in the present day to the highest degree of civil and religious liberty that man perhaps can ever expect to enjoy, free to express our opinions without the terrors of the stake or the tortures of the rack, to awe us into silence, or force us into dissimulation, it is with a mixture of curiosity and indignant surprise that we cast back our glance over a space of centuries, and see our ancestors struggling in all the mazes of ignorance and the labyrinths of superstition, alike passive under the mental tyranny of their monkish rulers and the bodily servitude of their despotic lords.

But every thing in this world changes, and excessive tyranny only more effectually prepares the way for perfect freedom. The minds of men in some degree induced to reason by the measures of Henry the Eighth, were no longer to be blinded by false pretences or intimidated by impotent threats; and the commencement of the Reformation dawned steadily and beautifully through the mists of papistic craft that the mental sloth of ages had permitted to accumulate.

It is difficult for us to imagine the despotic control at that time exercised over the whole faculties, whether physical or mental, of our ancestors; and it requires some effort to picture to ourselves the revivifying effect that must have attended the spreading of the reformed doctrines. Men, who had seldom excrted their reasoning powers, were at once invited to discuss theological difficulties, and to solve the deepest mysteries of religion: and as by the reformed tenets every matter was open for discussion, there were few bounds set to inquiry; but various tenets and various opinions were as quickly spread, as engerly adopted.

At this critical moment a translation of that Book, by all allowed to be the only proper guide of conduct, the only safe chart by whose aid man could hope to steer through the stormy seas and dangerous shoals with which his course is surrounded, was published and set forth:

PREFACE.

and its effect in hushing controversy and silencing factious clamour, may not unaptly be compared to that of the sun, when he breaks through the fast flitting clouds, and shining forth, dispels them by his brightness; and day, beautiful day, reigns in all its splendour.

The light that thus broke through the mental darkness of the reign of Henry the Eighth, fed as it was by the Holy Word of God, burnt purely and steadily; and although adverse winds and hostile gusts shook its flame for a time during the reign of Mary, they could not extinguish it, but left it to throw its calm and heavenly rays on our own and future ages.

That translation of the Bible is now for the second time reprinted,* and words of ours are not necessary either to point out its worth or to extol its merit, to cite it for its interest or celebrate it for its rarity—but it goes forth once again into the world as the labour of a man eminent for his piety and learning, as a faithful version of the original Scriptures, and as one of those means to which we may gratefully ascribe the establishment of our present national religion.

MEMOIR

COVERDALE. MYLES

THE name of our venerable translator seems to have been derived, not from his parents, but from Yorkshire, according to the best authorities, was his native county; and there can be his birthplace. no reasonable doubt that he was born in the parish of Coverham, in the district of Coverdale, in the North Riding. The year 1488 is given as the date of his birth, but the month and day cannot be ascertained. An obscurity, which no research has been sufficient to dispel, rests on his parentage and carly education: we may presume that he spent his boyish days among the tranquil scenes of his native place, familiar with its sloping hills, verdant meadows, and cheerful trout streams, which, as they spread before the eyes of this active minded lad, would arouse many a beautiful thought, and inspire many a happy feeling. Coverham Abbey was situated in the neighbourhood of his birthplace, and perhaps it was by some of the brotherhood of that establishment that young Miles of Coverdale was instructed in the elements of learning.*

At what period he left Yorkshire we are not informed, but in early life he entered the Monastery of the Augustines at Cambridge, of which he afterwards became a brother. Previous to the visit of Erasmus in the year 1511, learning appears to have been at a low ebb at Cambridge; afterwards it revived, having received an impulse from the influence of that extraordinary man: great hostility, however, was manifested by many in the university towards his efforts for the revival of literature, for when the Greek Testament, which he had edited, first appeared in Cambridge, it was absolutely forbidden by the heads of one of the colleges. "They object to us," said Erasmus, "the feigned authority of synods, and magnify the great peril of the Christian faith, and the danger of the church, which they pretend to support with their shoulders, which are much fitter to prop a waggon." Among the scholars who mainly contributed to the restoration of sound learning in the university, Dr. Robert Barnes, who entered the Augustine Monastery in 1514, and became prior and master in 1523, stands preeminent. He cultivated a taste for classic literature, devoted himself to the study of the Scriptures, and after his conversion, became a leading champion of the Refor-Coverdale, being one of the order of the Augustine friars, was associated with this mation. distinguished individual, and probably derived great advantage from his friendship and instructions.

The priory of the Augustines rapidly advanced in literary reputation under the presidency of Foxe says " he caused the house shortly to flourish with good letters, and made a great Barnes. part of the house learned (who before were drowned in barbarous rudeness), as Master Cambridge, Master Field, Master Coleman, Master Burley, Master Coverdale, with divers others of the university that sojourned there for learning's sake." † Divine Providence was thus preparing our translator, by his habits of study and his distinguished attainments in scholarship, for the great work which has immortalized his name.

The principles of evangelical truth which were embraced by Barnes gradually spread, and many in the university began to rally round him and adopt his views. Drawn together by devout sympathics, they were accustomed to assemble for study, conference, and prayer; and that they might do this as much as possible unnoticed by their enemics, they chose as their place of resort, a house called "the White Horse," which had a private back entrance, convenient for the men of St. John's and King's College, who appear to have formed a considerable part of the assembly. One's imagination lingers over that old " White Horse," with its antiquated apartments, as a kind of infant school, where those babes in Christ were trained up under the care of the Great Teacher, for subsequent usefulness and honour. These meetings, however private, could not fail to attract attention; the house was contemptuously called "Germany," on account of its being thus associated with the principles of Luther; and circumstances at length required that the friends of truth should publicly declare themselves. Hence, on Christmas eve, Sunday 24th December, 1525,* Barnes preached at St. Edmund's Church, Trinity Hall, and boldly avowed his dissent from the superstitions and despotism of Rome. He took occasion in his discourse to make an attack on Cardinal Wolsey, and, if we are to believe what was said by his accusers, to ridicule his golden shoes, his pole-axes, pillars, golden cushions, crosses and red gloves. A vein of humour, and a habit of satirical and witty allusion to the manners of the times, and the abuses in the church, were in those days regarded as by no means unseemly in the pulpit, and were frequently indulged in with great effect by the advocates of the Reformation. The playful sallies, and the hard arguments of Barnes were offensive to the friends of Popery and to the proud cardinal, and very shortly after the delivery of this famous sermon we find the preacher in trouble. He was apprehended, conveyed to London, and brought before Wolsey: convicted of heresy, the alternative was offered-to abjure or burnpoor human nature shrunk from the fiery ordeal, and in an evil moment Barnes signed his recantation.

"Master Coverdale" is mentioned by Foxe as one of the friends who accompanied the prior of the Augustines to London, stood by him in his trials, and assisted in the preparation for his defence the night before he met the cardinal. Such conduct indicates his faithful attachment to Barnes, and shows that he felt a strong sympathy with him in his religious views: but neither his master nor himself, at that time, saw the whole of the truth upon the grand points of the popish controversy. Coverdale was only feeling his way by degrees out of those paths of theological error in which he had been accustomed to walk. So far as he perceived the light, he was prepared to follow it.

Another name of a far different character here becomes connected with Coverdale's history. He was introduced to Cromwell, and the friendship of that extraordinary person led to very important consequences. The patronage of one who was then a favourite with Wolsey, and afterwards so distinguished a favourite with Henry VIII, must have greatly contributed to Coverdale's personal safety amidst the dangers that threatened the advocates of the Reformation; and, moreover, the pecuniary assistance, which there is no doubt that he received from the same quarter in his literary studies, and in his work of translation, were of great value; but though we are disposed to give Coverdale credit for honesty and courage, we admit that it is possible he was for awhile somewhat fettered by his connection with this remarkable man. There is a letter from Coverdale to Cromwell, preserved among the State Papers, without date, which evidently belongs to the commencement of their acquaintance; perhaps it was written in the year 1527, or somewhat earlier.†

* See Foxe's Acts and Monuments. Townsend's edition, Vol. IV. Note 751. The correctness of this date is there established.

+ The commissioners date it 1532, but they observe very justly, that it belongs to the commencement of Cromwell's patronage of Coverdale. Mr. Anderson, in his 'Annals of the Bible,' dates it 1531, but Cromwell's patronage had commenced much earlier, for we have a letter to him in August, 1527, from which it appears that Coverdale was then well known to Cromwell, if not in his employ. At the time this letter was written Coverdale was an Augustine Friar, but in 1528 he had thrown off the Augustine habit, and become a secular priest—a circumstance inconsistent with the late date assigned to this letter, unless as Mr. A. supposes, Coverdale afterwards resumed his friar's habit, which is a perfectly gratuitous and very improbable supposition. There seems no reason for referring the expression, " beginning to taste of Holy Scriptures," to the commencement of Coverdale's translation, hut simply to his early studies of the sacred volume.

" MOST SINGULAR GOOD MASTER,

"With due humility, I beseech unto your Mastership all godly comfort, grace, and prosperous health. For so much as your goodness is so great toward me, your poor child, only through the plenteousness of your favour and benevolence, I am the bolder of your goodness, in this my rude style, if it like your favour, to revocate to your memory the godly communication which your Mastership had with me, your orator, in Master Moor's house upon Easter Eve, amongst many and divers fruitful exhortations, specially of your singular favour, and by your most comfortable words, I perceive your gracious mind towards me.

"Wherefore, most honourable Master, for the tender love of God, and for the fervent zeal that you have to virtue and godly study, (cordis genibus provolutus,) I humbly desire and beseech your goodness, of your gracious help. Now I begin to taste of Holy Scriptures; now, honour be to God I am set to the most sweet smell of holy letters, with the godly savour of holy and ancient doctors, unto whose knowledge I cannot attain, without diversity of books, as is not unknown to your most excellent wisdom. Nothing in the world I desire, but books as concerning my learning. They once had, I do not doubt but Almighty God shall perform that in me, which He, of his most plentiful favour and grace, hath begun. Moreover, as touching my behaviour, your Mastership's mind once known, with all lowliness I offer myself, not only to be ordered in all things as shall please your wisdom, but also as concerning the education and instruction of others, alonly to ensue your prudent counsel; for whatever there is in you of counsel, nothing is impolitic, nothing but what is divine; for whatever you do, you do nothing inconsiderately, and you never boast that you are a chief philosopher: of the dew of heaven (after the manner of Jacob) you have obtained the chief blessing. From your mighty stream I long to drink, because, in your presence, I would not speak in a common manner. Farewell, thou ornament of literature, of councils, and of all virtues !

" From the Augustine's this May-day. Your child and beedman in Jesu Christ,

" FRERE MYLES COV'DALE."*

From this letter it appears, that Coverdale had recently been introduced to the rising favourite, and had received from him tokens of kindness which inspired his gratitude and confidence. Cromwell was favourable to the Reformation, and had devoted himself in early life to the reading of the New Testament. Coverdale wanted books to assist him in the study of the Scriptures, and the drift of the letter seems to be a delicate application for Cromwell's aid in that respect. The tone of submission and flattery adopted by Coverdale, was one of the vices of the age, in which he was too prone to indulge; and when comparing him with his great contemporary Tyndale, in this point of view, it is remarkable how superior the latter appears. The house in which the interview took place is supposed by Mr. Anderson† to have been Sir T. More's, and this connection between Coverdale and Sir Thomas, suggests another reason for the security which our translator enjoyed in those perilous times. He was still at Cambridge in the Augustine Priory, on the 25th of August of the same year, when he wrote the following letter to his patron:—

" RIGHT HONOURABLE MASTER,

"In my most lowly manner, I commend me unto you, evermore desiring to hear of the preservation of your prosperity. So it is, I was required by Mr. George Lawson to deliver this writing to your Mastership mine ownself; notwithstanding, such an impediment hath chanced, that I must desire favour on your behalf for my excusation. For Master Moor's kinsman is not all well at ease, for he labours, it is certainly thought under fever, the fever being of that species that in regard to food, he foolishly turns away from it like a lunatic, but now it is discovered that he is almost rid of it. Wherefore, I beseech you to have me excused, and if I knew that my coming to London might stand with your favour, truly the bird was never gladder of day than I would be to come. But briefly. I am ready at your commandment, for it remains with you to command as you will the abilities of your Miles.

"As for the rest, there is nothing divulged with us that is new, except the rumour among our order that one of our masters is accused of homicide, another is dilated for heresy, and a third is reported of the crime of theft, namely Master Stocks, junior; of which affair I will certify you afterwards, on its being made manifest. I have nothing more to say, every blessing attend you and yours. This may Christ the mighty grant, to whom be honour and dominion for ever.

"From Cambridge 27th August, 1527.

"Yours MILO COVERDALUS."*

This letter would seem to show that Coverdale was at that time in Cromwell's employ, and it expresses a readiness to obey his commands, which would have been more to the writer's credit had it been somewhat qualified. But in Coverdale's mind the truth through "the sweet smell of holy letters" was progressing : the superstitions and errors of popery were seen with increased vividness, and the mental excreises and conflicts of our translator led, eventually, to the renunciation of the friar's cowl, and the bold and warm-hearted preaching of the reformed faith. In the bloodstained register of the Bishop of London, we find the following confession by Thomas Topley, an Augustine Friar, which throws light on the course adopted by Coverdale at this crisis in his history. "My mind," says the confessor, "was much troubled with the said book 'Wicliff's Wicket,' which did make the sacrament of Christ's body, in form of bread, but a remembrance of Christ's passion, till I heard Sir Myles Coverdale preach, and then my mind was sore withdrawn from the blessed sacrament, insomuch that I took it then for the remembrance of Christ's body. Furthermore he said and confessed, that in the Lent last past, as he was walking in the field at Bumstead, with Sir Myles Coverdale, late friar of the same order, going in the habit of a secular priest, who had preached the fourth Sunday in Lent at Bumstead (29th March, 1528), they did commune together of Erasmus' works, and also upon confession. This Sir Miles said, and did hold that it was sufficient for a man to be contrite for his sins betwixt God and his conscience, without confession made to a priest, which opinion this respondent thought to be true, and did affirm and hold the same at that time. Also he saith, that at the said sermon made by the said Sir Myles Coverdale at Bumstead, he heard him preach against worshipping of images in the church, saying, that men in no wise should honour or worship them, which likewise he thought to be true, because he had no learning to defend it." † Coverdale had now taken a decided step :-- faithful to his convictions, he confessed his Saviour before men. Perhaps it was with a lively remembrance of the treatment he had received in the early part of his history as an avowed reformer, that he wrote the following passage in his preface to a work entitled, 'The Old Faith.' "Alas! and woe to this unthankful world, for like as a great number that be in prison of Satan, will not come forth when they are called, and the door set open, but go on still stumbling in darkness when the lantern of light is offered them; even so if any man play a wise man's part, and do as he is warned by God's word, he shall have a sort of apish people, a number of dizzards, and scornful mockers; which because the man will not dance in the devil's morrice with them, nor keep their company in the bondage of sin and vice; neither run with them into like confusion, as St. Peter calleth it, laugh him to scorn, and blear out their tongues at him, even like fools and coxcombs of the world. And like as when a poor wretch cometh out of prison, he shall have more to stand gazing and gaping upon him. than to do him good, or to help him to his fees: even so now that God of his mercy hath called us out of Satan's prison, and from the school of false doctrine, my lord's fool, with his companions, standeth staring upon us, and mocketh us because we sit not still with other prisoners. There goeth a fellow of the new learning, saith one; there is one of these new-fangled gospellers, saith another; that is one of the new brethren, saith a third, he followeth the new faith."t

The bold step taken by Coverdale, and the confession made by Topley, belong to the year 1528; and the next year we find the former on the continent in company with the illustrious Tyndale; according to Foxe's statement, meeting there by appointment, and assisting him in preparing the translation of the Pentateuch for press; for which his recent studies in Holy Scripture, and his well known acquaintance with the original languages, which must surely have been commenced before this period, had in a good degree qualified him. The immediate cause of his leaving

England, does not appear; but coupling the fact of his departure carly in 1529, with the decided course he was pursuing in 1528, the common supposition that it was with a view to his personal safety, seems by no means improbable.*

In the year 1526, copies of Tyndale's version were stealthily brought over from the continent, and were scattered throughout England. The priest, the layman, the scholar, and the peasant, sought and obtained the blessed book, and many and touching are the tales related respecting its circulation and its use. Sometimes it was read in the secret chamber by the midnight lamp, or in the fields and forests far away from the haunts of men; and sometimes it was concealed from the prying search of enemies in warehouses, under heaps of flax; in cottages under the boarding of the floor: and in many other ways which pious ingenuity devised. The portion of God's word which the people now possessed, quickened their desire for the rest of the sacred volume: and the influence of Anne Boleyn, who for a time reigned supreme in the king's affection, disposed Henry to relax somewhat his severe opposition to the circulation of the Scriptures in English. Cranmer, who was raised to the primacy in 1533, publicly expressed his earnest desire to see the Bible in the hands of his fellow countrymen, and in the winter of 1534, four days before Christmas, stood up in the Chapter House of Old St. Paul's, amidst a convocation of the clergy, and moved that the king should be petitioned to grant a translation of the entire Scriptures into the English language, † The year 1535 may therefore be regarded as a critical era in the religious history of our country; when the people were waiting for the word of life, and some of the obstacles in the path of its progress were melting away.

Coverdale was the first to meet the existing spiritual want of his country. Where he went after he left Tyndale cannot now be shown; there is a chasm in his history from that time to the year 1535: but his publication then of the whole Bible, shows that during the interval, Providence had been preparing him for the performance of a great work. Judging from the result of his toil given to the world, we may fairly infer that he had been spending some years in study; which, whether it had direct reference or not to such an undertaking, certainly fitted him for it, and provided him with materials for its execution. The history of the origin and progress of his translation is involved in great obscurity. Three or four points only can be satisfactorily ascertained, the rest are left to probable conjecture. He states himself, in his prologue to the edition of the Bible published in 1550, that he undertook, as he was desired in the year 1534, to set forth this special translation. And he also states in his prologue to the translation the following particulars:---" Considering how excellent knowledge and learning an interpreter of Scripture ought to have in the tongues, and pondering also mine own insufficiency therein, and how weak I am to perform the office of a translator, I was the more loath to meddle with this work. Notwithstanding, when I coneidered how great pity it was that we should want it so long, and called to my remembrance that adversity of them, which were not only of ripe knowledge, but would also with all their hearts have performed that they began, if they had not had impediment; considering, I say, that by reason of their adversity it could not so soon have been brought to an end as our most prosperous nation would fain have had it; these, and other reasonable causes considered, I was the more bold to take it in hand, and to help me herein I have had sundry translations, not only in Latin, but also of the Dutch interpreters, whom (because of their singular gifts and special diligence in the Bible) I have been the more glad to follow for the most part according as was required. But, to say the truth before God, it was neither my labour nor desire to have this work put in my hand; nevertheless, it grieved me that other nations should be more plenteously provided for with the Scripture in their mother tongue than we; therefore, when I was instantly required, though I could not do so well as I would, I thought it yet my duty to do my best, and that with a good will." He also observes in his dedication, "as the Holy Ghost moved other men to do the cost hereof, so was I emboldened in God to labour in the same." From this then it appears, that he was desired by others to perform this work; that they supplied him with the pecuniary means; that the desire was expressed to him in the year 1534; that the adversity of some better qualified for the undertaking induced him to attempt it: and that he availed himself of other translations in completing his own. It is generally conjectured, and with much probability, that his patron Cromwell was the chief person who prompted him to the undertaking, and supplied him with funds. It seems almost equally probable that the party alluded to as better qualified than himself was Tyndale, whose adversity, by which his imprisonment most likely is intended, synchronises with the date 1534, when the desire was expressed to Coverdale that he should set forth a translation. This brings down the preparation of the work for the press to a very late period, and leaves but a very short time for its completion; for it plainly appears from the colophon to the book, that it was finished 4th October, 1535. Yet, after a very attentive consideration of the matter, we cannot see how, with Coverdale's own statement before us, we can suppose that the translator previously to that period was engaged on a version with an express view to its publication. We are fully aware of the difficulty which presses on this view of the case, arising from the very limited space of time assigned to Coverdale for completing so great a work; but that difficulty is considerably diminished by the following considerations: that according to our view of his history he had been for some time engaged in the study of the Holy Scriptures in the original; that most likely for his own private purposes, or with some general view to future usefulness, he had previously made and preserved translations of some parts of the Bible, a supposition by no means inconsistent with the modest terms in which he speaks of his attainments;* that by his own acknowledgment he availed himself of the aid afforded by existing versions; and especially that he would avail himself of Tyndale's translation in those portions of the sacred volume which that noble veteran had already published. Though we have somewhat modified our views as to the actual amount of Coverdale's labour during the space in question, since we wrote some years ago the sketch of EnglishTranslations and Translators, we are still of opinion that he accomplished a herculean task. He looked at immortal souls and felt that their welfare waited on his labours; he looked into eternity and saw that the Bible was the only star which enlightened its gloom; he looked up to God and found in Him an all-sufficient helper in the task he had undertaken.

* Mr. Anderson in his 'Annals,' &c., Vol. I. p. 239, supposes that Coverdale was sent over "to sound Tyndale," to see "whether he was a practicable man," and "to induce him to return to England," suppositions which reflect greatly on Coverdale's character, and for which there is not the shadow of proof. At this time Coverdale, according to our view of his history, had begun the study of Holy Scripture, and certainly was qualified from his attainments as a scholar to help Tyndale. We see no reason to discredit allogether Foxe's statement on this subject.

Coverdale mentions in his prologue sundry translations in Latin and Dutch, from which he had derived assistance, and in another place he limits the number to five-what translations he referred to by this acknowledgment it is very natural to inquire, but very difficult to determine. The Vulgate of course was included; the three versions executed by Paguinus, Leo Juda, and Luther are probably to be added, but as to the fifth, whether it were the Bible of Rudelius, or the Dutch version of 1526, or the Lower Saxon one of 1533, we are at a loss to decide; perhaps his reason for passing over in silence his large obligations to Tyndale's published versions, was that he felt any acknowledgment of assistance derived from that quarter would be prejudicial to the success of his work, as Tyndale and his translations had been denounced by the ruling powers in England. As to the place where our translator printed the volume, the question, like so many others connected with the origin of the version, can only be answered by conjecture. From a resemblance which the woodcuts bear to those found in Egenolph's books printed at Frankfort, it has been supposed by some that it was executed there; while others again, from the similarity of the type to that which is used in books printed by Forschover at Zurich, have concluded that he was the printer. Cologne also has been mentioned. Of these Zurich seems to have the best claim to the disputed honour; and to that city it is generally conceded. Could we ascertain that there was the place both of the preparation and printing of the book, the imagination would fondly linger over that cheerful and animated city, "embosomed among vine-clad knolls, meadows and orchards, and surmounted by forests, above and beyond which appear the loftier summits of the Albis," with our translator working in some little room, through the live-long day till after the sun had set behind those alpine heights, and then rising to his task again before the same sun gilded the opposite horizon.

* Mr. Anderson in his 'Annals of the Bible,' Vol. I. p. 553, supposes that the translation was commenced with a view to publication some time before, and that the setting forth relates to the printing of what was previously prepared. For the reasons stated above, we cannot adopt that view.

+ See Anderson's ' Annals of the Bible,' Vol. I. p. 565.

The competency of Coverdale to his task has been satisfactorily proved by Mr. Whitaker in his 'Critical Enquiry.' His learning, for the age in which he hved, was very considerable-it was acknowledged by his contemporaries, it is evidenced by his works. The author of the interesting History of Richmondshire, attributes to Coverdale a very curious epitaph, written in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, supposed to belong to the year 1538; which, if it were certainly his production, would confirm his claims to be considered a superior scholar, but most persons, it is apprehended, will feel a little sceptical about the date, on looking at the curious relic, and will be inclined to assign it to a later period.* But while the scholarship of Coverdale is placed beyond dispute, it must be acknowledged that there are many renderings in his version so peculiar, that one is at a loss to find his authority for them; and what is still more remarkable, and deeply to be regretted, he differed from Tyudale in using the word penance and amendment, instead of repentance. Highly as we value the labours of Coverdale, we must greatly prefer, not only in this respect but as a whole, the version of his truly illustrious, though by the men of his generation, dishonoured contemporary. Nor can we help also deeply lamenting the style of extravagant subserviency and fulsome flattery adopted by Coverdale in his dedication to King Henry VIII; a style of address, which, though characteristic of the age, received no sanction from anything which proceeded from the pen of Tyndale. It should, however, in justice to Coverdale be added, that if his dedication be objectionable on account of its flattery, his prologue to the reader is worthy of the highest praise, and abounds in beautiful and profitable thought.

The reception which Coverdale's version met with on its arrival in England, is described by Fulke, in a report which he gives of part of a sermon which he heard the venerable father deliver in that famous old preaching place, St. Paul's Cross. The story related by Coverdale has been referred by Mr. Anderson to the history of the Bible printed in 1539 at Paris, under his superintendence: but that Bible was not Coverdale's translation, nor was it ever called by his name. It was a revision of Rogers' edition; Coverdale could not have referred to it as his own. The edition of 1535 always went by his name, and would certainly be understood to be meant by the audience who listened to his story. " I myself," says Fulke, " and so did many hundreds beside, hear that reverend father, M. Doctor Coverdale of holy and learned memory, in a sermon at Paul's Cross, upon occasion of some slanderous reports that then were raised against his translation, declare his faithful purpose in doing the same; which, after it was finished and presented to King Henry VIII, of famous memory, and by him committed to divers bishops of that time to peruse, of which I remember Stephen Gardiner was one: after they had kept it long in their hands, and the king was divers times sued unto for the publication thereof; at the last being called for by the king himself they rederivered the book; and being demanded by the king what was their judgment of the translation, they answered that there were many faults therein. 'Well,' said the king, ' but are there any heresics maintained thereby.' They answered ' that there was no heresics that they could find maintained thereby?' 'If there be no heresies,' said the king, 'then in God's name let it go abroad among our people.' According to this judgment of the king and the bishops, M. Coverdale defended his translation, confessing that he did now himself espy some faults which, if he might review it once over again, as he had done twice before, he doubted not but to amend: but for any hercey he was sure there was none maintained by his translation."

Foxe inserts, in his 'Acts and Monuments,' certain injunctions bearing date 1536, in one of which "every parson or proprietary of any parish church" was required to provide a book of the whole Bible in Latin, and also in English, before the 1st of August, to be laid in the choir. This injunction is not found in Cranmer's 'Register,' in Wilkins' 'Concilia,' nor in Burnet's 'Collection of Records,' whence it has been concluded that the clause given by Foxe is an interpolation; but it is far more probable that the clause was copied by the martyrologist from a draft of the injunctions which, before they were issued and inserted in the 'Register,' underwent alteration. The clause in question, if inserted in the injunctions of 1536, must have referred to Coverdale's version, as no other version of the whole Bible was then published; and hence, according to the view just taken of the document, it would appear that the king's patronage of the book had been obtained, and that Cromwell prepared an order in favour of its circulation, but that some circumstance occurred to prevent the issue of the injunction. That circumstance probably was the death of Anne Boleyn, who perished on the scaffold in May, 1536, deplored by the friends of the English Reformation, which had been advanced by her influence, and was now checked by her removal. Lewis mentions a MS. book of devotions in the family of Francis West, Boxley, Kent, which once belonged to Anne Boleyn, containing a note in the queen's hand, referring to the "glad tidings of salvation being promulgated, published, and set at liberty by the grace poured into the heart of our prince," which note corroborates the idea of Henry having regarded Coverdale's translation with favour before the queen's death; and what more fully confirms and further explains the view we have taken of the case, is a passage contained in a contemporary writer, who informs us that "through the intercession of Queen Anne, the king at last granted that English Bibles might be printed, and placed in every church where the people might read them. Which concession of the king did not then take effect, because shortly after Queen Anne was beheaded."* But though Coverdalc's translation never enjoyed the regal patronage of which there was once the promise, it was allowed for awhile to be circulated without hindrance; and if it never attained the popularity so justly acquired by subsequent versions, it enjoyed the honour of taking the lead in the goodly procession of English Bibles which have been so long, and of late in such gloriously augmented numbers, issuing from the press. Nor can we doubt that the reading of it, in multitudes of instances, proved the means of enlightening and regenerating the human mind.

Probably Coverdale was in England in the year 1537, when two works of his were published by Nicholson a printer in Southwark. But the important undertaking to which he devoted himself at this period, and which now claims our particular attention, was the superintendence of the printing of the great Bible.

Matthew's Bible appeared in 1537; it contained the whole of the version which had been prepared by Tyndale. That great man had laboured at the work in obscurity and exile, and then scaled the truth with his blood, the victim of treachery and malice. The book was edited by his friend Rogers, who soon after followed him, through the fires of martyrdom, to the rewards of heaven. A copy of this translation was conveyed to Cranmer, and filled his soul with joy: he forwarded the version to Cromwell, pronouncing it better than any other translation previously made. Cromwell recommended it to the king, who sanctioned it, authorising it "to be bought and read within this realm;" thus patronising at last, though unwittingly, the labours of that very man, the honoured Tyndale, whom he had persecuted with releatless cruelty. The Bible became extremely popular, and surpassed in the public estimation the translation by Coverdale. But the clergy were not satisfied with it; the prologue and notes were charged with the taint of heresy, and a new translation was desired. Cromwell projected a new translation, which proved in fact a revison of Tyndale's work, the prologues and notes being omitted. This was the great Bible, the preparation of which he committed to Coverdale. The place selected for the printing of this book was Paris, which was eligible on account of the superior workmen and materials to be obtained there. In June, 1538, Coverdale, and Grafton the printer, who had accompanied him to Paris, were hard at work with their men, as the following letter testifies :----

A Letter from COVERDALE and GRAFTON to CROMWELL.

"After most humble and hearty commendations to your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand, that we be entered into your work of the Bible, whereof (according to our most bounden duty) we have here sent unto your lordship two ensamples; one in parchment, wherein we intend to print one for the king's grace, and another for your lordship; and the second, in paper, whereof all the rest shall be made; trusting, that it shall be not only to the glory of God, but a singular pleasure also to your good lordship the causer thereof, and a general edifying of the king's subjects, according to your lordship's most godly request. For we follow not only a standing text of the Hebrew, with the interpretation of the Chaldee and the Greek, but we set also, in a private table, the diversity of readings of all texts, with such annotations, in another table, as shall doubtless elucidate and clear the same, as well without any singularity of opinions, as all checkings and reproofs. The print, no doubt, shall please your good lordship; the paper is of the best sort in France. The charge certainly is great, wherein, as we most humbly require your favourable help at this present, with whatsoever it shall please your good lordship to let us have, so trust we, if need require, in our just business to be defended from the papists by your lordship's favourable letters, which we most humbly desire to have (by this bearer, William Graye), either to the bishop of Winchester, or to some other whom your lordship shall think most expedient. We be daily threatened, and look ever to be spoken withal, as this bearer can farther inform your lordship; but how they will use us, as yet we know not. Nevertheless, for our farther assurance, where through we may be the abler to perform this your lordship's work, we are so much the bolder of your good lordship; for other refuge have we none, under God and our king, whom, with noble Prince Edward, and all you, their most honourable council, Goid Almighty preserve now and ever. Amen.

"Written at Paris the 23rd day of June, by your lordship's assured and daily orators,

" Myles Coverdale. " Richard Grafton."*

The Bishop of Winchester was at that time ambassador in France; but he was soon succeeded by Bonner, then archdeacon of Leicester, who was directed by Cromwell, agreeably to Coverdale's request, to aid the enterprise. An application was also made by King Henry to his royal brother of France to permit the printing of the English Bible in Paris, to which consent was given, and the royal license was duly issued.

In the autumn the work was going on, as appears from the following letters:-

A Letter from COVERDALE, GRAFTON, and GREY to CROMWELL.

"After most humble and due salutation to your good lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand that your work going forward, we thought it our most bounden duty to send unto your lordship certain leaves thereof, specially seeing we had so good occasion, by the returning of your beloved servant Sebastian. And as they are done so will we send your lordship the residue from time to time. As touching the manner and order that we keep in the same work, pleaseth your good lordship to be advertised, that the mark (1) in the text signifieth, that upon the same (in the latter end of the book) there is some notable annotations, which we have written without any private opinion, only after the best interpreters of the Hebrews, for the more clearness of the text. This mark Q betokeneth, that upon the same text there is diversity of reading among the Hebrews, Chaldees, and Greeks, and Latinists, as in a table at the end of the book shall be declared. This mark * showeth that the sentence, written in small letters, is not in the Hebrew or Chaldee, but in the Latin, and seldom in the Greek, and that we nevertheless, would not have it extinct, but highly accept it for the more explanation of the text. This token t in the Old Testament giveth to understand, that the same text which followeth it, is also alleged of Christ or of some apostle in the New Testament. This (among other, our necessary labours) is the way that we take in this work; trusting verily, that as God Almighty moved your lordship to set us unto it, so shall it be to His glory, and right welcome to all them that love to serve Him and their prince, in true faithful obedience. As is only known to the Lord of Heaven, to whom we most heartily pray for your lordship's preservation.

"At Paris, 9th day of August, 1538, by your faithful orators, †

" MYLES COVERDALE. " RICHARD GRAFTON. " WILLIAM GREY."

In the preparation of this edition, Coverdale was evidently influenced very much by the principle of expediency, to which he was wont to pay too great regard; and perhaps Cromwell had also given him directions respecting the course he pursued, with a view to meet the prejudices of the day. Passages from the Vulgate, unauthorised by the original, were introduced into the version, with a distinguishing mark. It gives the great Bible a peculiar character, and without Coverdale's statement in the foregoing correspondence, the supplementary matter with the curious marks pre-fixed, is calculated to puzzle the mere English reader.

* State Papers, Cromwell Correspondence, Vol. I. No. 107.

† Ibid. Vol. I. No. 108.

Bonner, though raised to the see of Hereford, continued in his diplomatic appointment at Paris, and to all who are acquainted with the subsequent history of this notorious persecutor, it will appear somewhat surprising, when they are informed by Foxe, that the ambassador encouraged the printing of the English Scriptures, invited the printers to his house, visited them in return, dined with them at home, and generously paid the cost of the entertainment. But the bishop was willing at this price to secure the good opinion of Cromwell, who, as the special favourite of his prince, had it in his power amply to repay the services of his friends.

The house of "Francis Regnault," some quaint looking building, in the Paris of the sixteenth century, in all probability long since fallen to decay, was the scene of the honoured toils of our translator, and the industrious printers. To this worthy we are introduced by the letter annexed, in which Coverdale and Grafton solicit a favour on his behalf, in acknowledgment of his former kindness, and in the hope of his future service.

A Letter from COVERDALE and GRAFTON to CROMWELL.

"After most humble and due salutations to your most honourable lordship. Pleaseth the same to understand, that we are instantly desired of our host (whose name is Francis Regnault, a Frenchman) to make supplication for him, unto your lordship. Whereas of long time he hath been an occupier into England more than forty years, he hath always provided such books for England as they most occupied; so that he hath a great number at this present, in his hands, as Primers in English, Missals, with other such like, whereof now (by the Company of the Booksellers in London) he is utterly forbidden to make sale, to the utter undoing of the man. Wherefore most humbly we beseech your lordship to be gracious and favourable unto him, that he may have licence to sell those which he hath done already; so that hereafter, he print no more in the English tongue, unless he have an English man that is learned, to be his corrector, and that is the man well contented withal. He is also contented and hath promised before my lord elect of Hereford, that if there be found any notable fault in his books, he will put the same out, and print the leaf again. Thus are we bold to write unto your lordship in his cause (as doth also my lord elect of Hereford), beseeching your lordship to pardon our boldness and to be good lord unto this honest man, whose servant shall give attendance upon your lordship's most favourable answer. If your lordship show him this benefit, we shall not fare the worse in the readiness and due expedition of this your lordship's work of the Bible, which goeth well forward, and within few months will draw to an end, by the grace of Almighty God, who preserve your good lordship, now and evermore.

" From Paris, the 12th day of September.

" Myles Coverdale. " Richard Grafton."*

The year was drawing to a close, † and with it the noble work in which Coverdale felt so deep an interest. The printers were probably engaged on the last sheet or two, and the superintendent of the press was anxious to ascertain his patron's pleasure, concerning the annotations proposed to be introduced, a circumstance, by the way, which shows how completely the preparation of this volume was under Croinwell's control; so much so, that it ought in justice to bear his name.

"RIGHT HONOURABLE AND MY SINGULAR GOOD LORD,

"After all due salutations I humbly beseech your lordship that by my lord elect of Hertford I may know your pleasure concerning the annotations of this Bible, whether I shall proceed therein

* State Papers, Cromwell Correspondence, Vol I. No. 115.

† A letter to Cromwell dated 30th October, is preserved among the State Papers. It relates entirely to a charge of disloyalty against a Mr. Beckynsall, whom Coverdale knew, and whose character he vindicates. "Neither," he says, "do I understand otherwise but at this present hour all we that be here of the king's nation are even of one heart and humble mind toward God and our sovereign."

or no. Pity it were that the dark places of the text, (upon the which I have always set a hand), should so pass undeclared. As for any private opinion or contentious words, as I will utterly avoid all such, so will I offer the annotations first to my said lord of Hereford, to the intent that he shall so examine the same, afore they be put in print, if it be your lordship's good pleasure that I shall so do. As concerning the New Testaments in English and Latin, whereof your good lordship received lately a book by your servant Sebastian, the cook, I beseech your lordship to consider the greenness thereof, which (for lack of time) cannot as yet be so apt to be bound as it should be : and whereas my said lord of Hereford is so good unto us to convey this much of the Bible to your good lordship, I humbly beseech the same to be defender and keeper thereof; to the intent that if these men proceed in their cruelness against us and confiscate the rest, yet this at the least may be safe by the means of your lordship, whom God the Almighty evermore preserve to his good pleasure. Amen.

"Written somewhat hastily, at Paris the 13th day of December. Your humble and faithful servitor. " Myles Coverdale."*

The English and Latin Testaments referred to were of an edition which we shall hereafter notice: it is more to our present purpose to mark the indications which the letter gives of rising troubles. The work had proceeded smoothly—it was now to be interrupted. Clouds were gathering, dark and portentous, and soon the tempest burst. Before the letter could reach its destination, there came forth, in the name of the Inquisitor-General in Paris, an instrument, dated 17th December, 1538, prohibiting poor Francis Regnault, and all others whom it might concern, from completing the said Bible in the vulgar Britannic tongue, and from making away with or concealing the sheets already printed, unless they were seen by this same inquisitor. The Englishmen were summoned to attend before this ecclesiastical tribunal, which had thus dared to raise itself in opposition to the royal prerogatives: but stricken with terror, they made a hasty retreat, leaving behind them the unfinished sheets, which were seized by the inquisitors and doomed to the flames; but the lieutenantgeneral, whose horror of heresy was surpassed by his love of gain, preferred to sell a quantity of them for waste paper; and they became the property of a haberdasher, who bought them, says Foxe, "to lap caps in." But they were destined to a nobler use: Grafton providentially recovered them, and thus completed many of the copies of the Bible which had previously been sent over to England. The repurchase of the haberdasher's sheets appears, from what Foxe says, not to have been effected till the latter part of the year 1539; but we find from existing copies that the book was "finyshed in April, anno 1539," whence we are to conclude that the part which was wanting to complete the work was printed in London, and that some copies were perfected before the recovery of such part of the edition as had fallen into the haberdasher's hands. It may be added, that it seems a much smaller portion of the work was destroyed than is generally supposed; inasmuch, as the recovered sheets were sufficient to fill "four great dry fats."

Cranmer's name has generally been connected with this " great Bible," but without reason. He wrote a preface for the new edition of it published in 1540,† but he does not appear to have had any thing to do with its original preparation. Cromwell and Coverdale were the persons to whom the credit and honour of the work must be assigned, the former having projected, and the latter having executed the undertaking. The volume exhibits a revision of Matthew's Bible, and though the renderings often differ very considerably from those in Coverdalc's version, it is not improbable that he was the reviscr.

The patron of this great work, who, with his manifold infirmities of character, evinced a deep regard for the word of God, and a warm desire for its circulation, took steps to secure that important object as soon as the great Bible was complete, by issuing injunctions to the clergy, enjoining upon them to provide the whole Bible of the largest volume in English, and set up the same in some convenient place within their churches, that their parishioners might commodiously resort to the same and read it. ‡

Great was the delight diffused through the community, by this concession of a spiritual right of which they had been long iniquitously debarred. " It was wonderful," says Strype, " to see with

The three foregoing letters are printed in the Appendix to the Memorials of Coverdale. 1838. Bagster.
 This preface sometimes occurs in the edition of 1539, but it was no doubt afterwards inserted in some of the copies.

what joy this book of God was received, not only among the learneder sort, and those that were noted for lovers of the Reformation, but generally all England over by the vulgar and common people, and with what greediness God's word was read, and what resort to places where the reading of it was. Every body that could, bought the book, or busily read it, or got others to read it to them, if they could not themselves; and divers more elderly people learned to read on purpose; and even little boys flocked among the rest to hear portions of the Holy Scriptures read." Both the eve of the poet, and the heart of the saint, must love to linger over the scene of the grey-headed sire, and the child with his curly locks, gathering round the well-spring of divine truth, and slaking their thirst at the living waters. The reading of the Bible in Old St. Paul's,* and in the aisles of many a cathedral and parish church, in the England of the sixtcenth century, is one of those beautiful associations with the history of the olden time which an English protestant must fondly cherish.

The following letter to Cromwell by our translator refers to the license which had been granted to Nicholson to sell Bibles and Testaments, and solicits a similar license for the same person to print certain sermonst which Coverdale had prepared for the press, and which had been revised by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It probably belongs to the early part of the year 1539. ‡

"After due consideration to your good lordship, I heartily and in most humble wise beseech the same, that inasmuch as the king's most excellent majesty, of his singular grace (by the means of your good lordship as God's instrument in that behalf) hath granted unto this bearer, James Nycolson, his gracious license and privilege, for the sale of his Bibles and New Testaments already printed; and forasmuch as his grace is also informed, and hath seen a part of our postils, or ordinary sermons, which the lord archbishop of Canterbury hath corrected, your lordship, according to your most loving and favourable manner of old, will help and further the said James Nycolson, to the king's most gracious privilege for certain years to print the same, considering the cost and charge that he bath had, not only for drawing of the said sermons out of Scripture, but also in preparing now of his letters and print for the setting forth of the same. This I most humbly require of your lordship, whom God preserve now and ever. Amen. "Your lordship's humble and daily orator, Myles Coverdale."

Before Coverdale left London for Paris, it seems that he arranged the plan of a Diglot Testament in Latin and English, which he left his friend Nicholson to publish. He wrote the dedication, and permitted the use of his name in connection with the book. But when the volume reached him, he found it had been most carelessly edited and printed, and was " both base, insensible, and clean contrary not only to the phrase of our language, but also from the understanding of the text in Latin." He therefore repudiated the work, and prepared another edition himself, which was printed in Paris, and published with the special approval of Bishop Bonner. The book was dedicated to Cromwell, and Coverdale explains in that dedication the history of Nicholson's incorrect edition. The English printer, however, was bent on securing his own profit, and therefore published himself a new edition of the Diglot, and gave the name of "Johan Hollybushe" on the title-page.

It was probably in the year 1539 & that Coverdale was employed in Berkshire, in the service of his early friend and patron Thomas Cromwell, who had now attained to the dignity of Lord Privy Seal. The subjoined letters, while they prove Coverdale's zeal and activity in searching for popish publications, and in suppressing the worship of one of England's most popular saints, Thomas of Canterbury, also shed a very interesting light upon the character and proceedings of those times.

- * Bonner, however, did not set up the Bibles till 1541. † Are these the "Fruitful Lessons" included in his works published by the Parker Society ? ‡ This is the date to which it is assigned in the 'Remains,' p. 490.

§ These letters have been considered by Anderson and others, to belong to the year 1538; but the transactions to which Coverdale's letters refer, are described by Strype as taking place in 1539.—(Mem. I. 549,) and the first of the letters is indorsed "Ao XXX," which probably means the year of the king's reign, which would be from April 22, 1538, to April 22, 1539. That Coverdale returned to England after the interruption at Paris, and did not leave till 1540, appears from a letter just published in the volume of Coverdale's 'Remains,' dated Frankfort, March 26th, 1548, in which he says "I am now on my return to England after an exile of eight years." Twenty-two letters written by him during this period are published in the 'Remains.' Most of these were written at Bergzabern, his stated place of residence. The correspondence is very interesting, and illustrates the piety and the zeal of this good man. They afford scarcely any particulars immediately relating to himself, but they evince much disinterested kindness towards others, and great anxiety for the promotion of religion.

"After my most humble and due salutation to your right honourable lordship, this is to advertise the same, that for lack of diligent inquisition and through overmuch sufferance there are in these countries (and so I fear me in many more) an innumerable sort of such popish books, as not only be incorrect, but are also great occasion to keep the king's subjects still in error, and to make them fall into such like inconvenience as did lately one John Cowper, whose accusation I trust your lordship hath received (or shall do) this week by the justice, in consideration of the premises I have (under your lordship's favourable correction) required the curate of Newbury to call for all such books as were either incorrect or against the king's most lawful act concerning Thomas à Becket, or the Bishop of Rome, by the means of the which request there are brought unto me in these two or three days a great number of such books; wherefore inasmuch as I perceive that this doth turn to the glory of God and to the honour of our most noble king, I humbly require your lordship to grant me authority, and to give me a charge and commandment by your letters, that wheresoever I understand any such unlawful books to be, I may correct them or cause them to be corrected. In the executing whereof I do not doubt but to win the parties, and to make them not only more fervent towards God and his word, but also to increase in due obedience towards the king's highness, whom with noble prince Edward, and you all of their most honourable council the mighty arm of God evermore preserve. From Newbury the vii day of February. Your favourable answer I most humbly require by this bearer my poor servant.

"Your lordship's humble and faithful servant,

" Myles Coverdale.

" To the right honourable my singular good lord, the Lord Privy Seal."

" My right humble salutation. Considering my most bounden duty in seeking the honour of the king our sovercign lord, I am constrained to write again unto your good lordship for none other cause so much us to signify unto the same, that as me thinketh (I speak under correction) a great number of the priests of this realm are run in premunire unto the king, inasmuch as they have not utterly extinct all such ecclesiastical service as is against his grace's most lawful supremacy and prerogative, for in the feast called Cathedra St. Peter a great part of their matins is plainly a maintenance of the Bishop of Rome's usurped power. This is evident in all the great matin books of the church of Newbury, and I doubt not but it is so likewise in many churches more. I found it the 7th day of this month, and I wonder at it, considering that it is so long since the act was made for the abolishing of all such usurped authority. This, my very dear and singular good lord, do I open and show only unto your lordship, neither doth any man else in the world know that I have uttered this thing, no, not this bearer, good Mr. Wynchcombe, unto whom (for his true heart towards the king's highness, and love towards your lordship) I might utter right secret things. The ever living God that never failed your good lordship guide the same in doing the thing that is to his glory, and to the honour of our most gracious king. Amen. If it be your lordship's good pleasure I shall do aught further herein, I humbly beseech you to know the same by writing, or otherwise by the mouth of Mr. Wynchcombe.

"From Newbury the viii day of February. Your lordship's humble and faithful servant,

" Myles Coverdale.

"To the right honourable and my very singular good lord, the Lord Privy Seal. This to be delivered, ad manus."

"In my most humble wise with like salutation to your right honourable lordship, this is to signify unto the same that, this 4th day of March, one Nicolas Hyde, and one John Gryese, of Henley-upon-Thames, came to me unto Newbury, reporting that in a glass window of our Lady Chapel, in the Church of the said Henley, the image of Thomas à Becket, with the whole feigned story of his death, is suffered to stand still: not only this, but that all the beams, irons, and candlesticks (whereupon tapers and lights were wont to be set up unto images) remain still untaken down, whereby the poor simple, unlearned people believe that they shall have liberty to set up their candles again unto images, and that the old fashion shall shortly return. Item, that one Thomas Woolley, of Henley, did forbid five of his neighbours his house for holding with the gospel, and said that he had evil will for receiving such men of the new learning. So that, in the said town of Henley, poor men are not only discouraged from the truth of God, but it appeareth also that the king's most gracious commandment is not put in execution. Now though Sir Walter Stoner,* knight, be the king's justice of peace at Henley, yet (under your lordship's correction) I reckon great and notable negligence in the Bishop of Lincoln, who being so nigh thereby doth not weed out such faults; yea, I fear it be as evil or worse in many more places of his diocese.

"It is my duty also to signify unto your good lordship, the great oversight of the stationers of London, who for their lucre and gains are not ashamed to sell still such primers as corrupt the king's subjects. A great number of them have my neighbours brought unto me, and a great sort of other most ungracious popish books (both contrary to God and the king's highness) have I taken up within the precincts of Newbury, and will do more, if your good lordship will give me authority, or bid me do it. Whereof I humbly beseech you (my most dear and singular good lord), to have your loving answer by the mouth of this bearer, young Mr. Wynchcombe, and to know your good pleasure what I shall do with these popish books that I have already, whether I shall burn them at the Market Cross or no. Thus the everlasting God preserve your good lordship long to endure. Amen.

"From Newbury, 5th day of March. Your humble and faithful servant,

" Myles Coverdale.

"To the right honourable and my very singular especial good lord, the Lord Privy Seal. This to be presented, ad manus."*

In the course of 1540, probably about the time that he lost his patron Cromwell, he went to Germany, where for some time he resided. Tubingen became the place of his abode, and from the university of that city he received a diploma conferring on him the distinction of doctor of divinity. He was now chiefly dependent for support on literary labour, and the education of the young. During the lifetime of Cromwell, his resources probably had been supplied by the bounty of that extraordinary man. When the latter fell a victim to the resentment of his capricious master, our translator lost a friend to whom he was under many temporal obligations, and a patron whose influence somewhat affected the independence of his character, and guided his proceedings to a greater extent than was desirable. Coverdale seems to have leaned too much on Cromwell, to have submitted too implicitly to his directions: to have deferred too humbly to the judgment of that politic minister. He certainly did not possess that bold independence of mind which marked the course of his distinguished contemporary, Tyndale. The latter had the self-erectness of the oak, the former, like the vine, appeared to need some outward prop. After Coverdale left Tubingen he went to reside in the dominions of the duke of Deux-ponts, and being well skilled in the German language, and a man of literary and theological reputation, he was favourably noticed by the duke, and appointed to the benefice of Bergzabern. During his stay on the continent, but at what time or place cannot be ascertained, he married a pious woman, the sister of a lady, the wife of Macchabæus Alpinus, a distinguished Scotchman, who held a high appointment under the king of Denmark. Coverdale thus took a step which thoroughly identified him with the reformers who had abjured the celibacy of the priesthood, as one of the great evils of the church of Rome. About this time, probably, he wrote and published his translation of Calvin's treatise on the Sacrament, to which he subjoined "the order that the church and congregation of Christ in Denmark doth use." At the close of which tract he remarks, "Let no man be slack in his duty ; but give God that which is his, and to the king the things that belongeth unto him." "This I say to stop the mouths and the blasphemous tongues of such as will not cease to rail on men, and to slander me (yea, even to the king's majesty), as though I were a perverter of common order, or took upon me to change the laws and to make new statutes. Nay, ye ungodly hypocrites, not so, but as I am sure that there is heavy damnation laid up for all such subjects as rebel or make sedition against the prince, or disobey the least commandment of God in their sovereign, even so I am assured that there is no less damnation prepared for those rulers or heads that make unjust laws and cruel statutes, to maintain their own lusts and oppress the poor."

In 1547 he was again in England, holding the appointment of almoner to Queen Catherine. At this time he enjoyed a high reputation for his learning and piety, and was one of the persons employed in the preparation of Erasmus's paraphrase of the New Testament for the use of English readers. He wrote the dedication of the second volume to Edward VI, and prefixed Tyndale's prologue to the epistle to the Romans, thus evincing the estimation in which he held the labours of his departed fellow exile. Probably he translated the former part of the volume as far as the end of the epistle to the Galatians.

Coverdale continued in the service of Catherine till her dcath, which happened in September, 1548. After the decease of Henry she married Lord Seymour, and went to reside at Sudley Castle, Gloucestershire, whither Coverdale accompanied his royal mistress. He officiated at her funeral, and carefully guarded the persons who were present against supposing that he gave his sanction to the popish ceremonies performed for the dead, some remains of which lingered in the service at these royal obsequies. The preacher requested "that none there should think, say, or spread abroad that the offering which was there done, was done any thing to profit the dead, but for the poor only: and also the lights which were carried and stood about the corpse were for the honour of the person, and for none other intent nor purpose."

After the death of the queen dowager, Coverdale was variously employed. He preached at St. Paul's Cross, on the 27th of April, 1549, when some Anabaptists did penance. In the summer of 1550, when Lord Russel went down into Devonshire, to quell the disturbances which arose from both civil and religious disaffection to the existing government, Coverdale accompanied the army, with the view of subduing the popular mind to obedience and loyalty, by the gentle influence of argument and expostulation. After the victory of Exeter, he celebrated the event in a thanksermon. For these services, according to an entry in the council book of Edward VI. 20th of June, 1550, Coverdale received the sum of forty pounds. In this year also two new editions of our translator's Testament were printed, and one of the Bible. On the 18th of January, 1551, he was put upon a commission for the seizure and trial of heretics; a commission which was the acnewal of a former one, unhappily distinguished by its intolerant proceedings against the unfortunate Joan of Kent. The new commission proceeded in the footsteps of the old one, and doomed to the stake a Dutch Arian. What part Coverdale took in the proceedings of the commission, or whether he took any part in them at all, we cannot determine. For the honour of his character, we hope that no considerations induced the reformer to implicate his name in the performance of deeds which must have been revolting to his benevolent heart; yet we cannot forget that men as kind as he, were so warped by the intolerant spirit of their age that, under the influence ut a stern but most mistaken sense of duty, they refused all mercy to those whom they had convicted of heretical opinions.

The next glimpse we have of Coverdale is at Westminster, where, on the 7th of March, 1550 (0.S.), we find him preaching a funeral sermon for Lord Wentworth, who had been lord chambertain, and at whose funeral special honour was done to his memory. Coverdale was on the road to high preferment. His office in the queen dowager's household, and the services he had performed for government, recommended him no doubt to the patronage of those who were in power, while his learning, active habits, and tried zeal in the cause of the Reformation, qualified him for some distinguished post in the English church. As early as the June of the preceding year mention is made in a letter from Peter Martyr then at Cambridge, of the probable promotion of Coverdale to the see of Exeter, in the room of Vesey, who from age and infirmity was unable to perform his episcopal duties. On the 14th of August, 1551, King Edward nominated Coverdale to the bishopric, Voscy having been induced to resign. But though by this appointment he was exalted to honour, and became possessed of influence, his pecuniary advantage was of small amount, as Vesey had alienated the revenues of the see to a very large extent. Indeed, such were the straitened circumstances of Coverdale, that he felt himself compelled to petition the king to relieve him from the payment of the first-fruits. Nor was it without considerable delay that he was able to proceed to his diocese; "such," says Strype, "were at that time the urgent affairs of state, or the secret hunderers of the gospel." Through Cranmer's influence matters were at length arranged; and on the 30th of August, Coverdale was consecrated at Croydon, bishop of Exeter. In the following September he was licensed to preach; a form which seems to have been necessary even for bishops in those days: and in the same month another and very curious license was granted him, allowing him and his wife Elizabeth, and five or six guests at their table, to eat meat on fast days.*

* Rymer's Federa, Part V. Ed. VI. p. 2. No. 35.

On the 6th of October a commission was addressed to eight bishops, of whom Coverdale was one, together with eight civil and eight common lawyers, directing them to undertake a revision of the ecclesiastical laws of the realm. Strype states* that the commissioners diligently pursued their task, and completed it; but in consequence of the king's early death the contemplated measure of reform was never carried into effect. In the discharge of the secular duties of his episcopal office Coverdale was very diligent, for it appears from the Lords' Journals, in 1552 and 1553, that he was not absent from the sittings of the House more than three times altogether. But as the whole of the two sessions did not occupy quite four months, these engagements would not detain the bishop very long from his diocese, where in the discharge of his spiritual functions he was most exemplary.

The following character of Coverdale, during his residence at Exeter, is given by Hoker his contemporary, who was chamberlain of the city. "He preached continually upon every holy day. and did read most commonly twice in the week in some one church or other within this city. He was after the rate of his livings a great keeper of hospitality, very sober in diet, godly in life, friendly to the godly, liberal to the poor, and courteous to all men, void of pride, full of humility, abhorring covetousness, and an enemy to all wickedness and wicked men, whose company he shunned, and whom he would in no wise shroud or have in his house and company. His wife, a most sober, chaste, and godly matron, his house and household another church in which was exercised all godliness and virtue. No one person being in his house which did not from time to time give an account of his faith and religion, and also did live accordingly; and as he had a care for the good success in religion, so had he also for the direction of the government in ecclesiastical causes, and because he was not skilful therein, neither would be hindered from his godly studies, and be encumbered with such worldly matters, which, nevertheless, he would have be done in all uprightness. justice, and equity; he sent to Oxford for a learned man to be his chancellor, and by the ministry of the writer hereof, he procured and obtained one Master Robert Weston, doctor of the civil law. and afterwards lord chancellor of Ireland, unto whom he committed his consistory, and the whole charge of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction, allowing unto him not only all the fees thereunto appertaining, but also lodged and found him, his wife, family, horse and man, within his own house, and gave him a yearly pension of forty pounds. And surely the bishop was no more godly and careful of his part concerning preaching, but this man also was as diligent and severe in doing of his office without reproach of being affectioned or corrupted. And notwithstanding this good man was a blameless bishop, and lived most godly and virtuous, yet the common people, those old bottles, would receive no wine, could not brook or digest him, for no other cause but because he was a preacher of the gospel, an enemy to papistry, and a married man. Many devices were accounted against him for his confusion, sometimes by false suggestions, sometimes by open railing, and false libels, sometimes by secret backbitings, and in the end practised his death by impoisoning, but by the providence of God, the snares were broken, and he delivered." †

In 1550 a new edition of Coverdale's Bible was printed at Zurich, which was the last previous to the first edition in the present form published in 1835. It was reissued with a new title-page in 1533, and "set forth with the king's most gracious license." It must have been one of the last instances in which that license was given, for Edward, after a short and anxious reign, was removed to another world on the 6th of July of the same year. It proved a mournful day for the protestantism of England, and her faithful sons were soon made to feel the weight of papal intolerance.

On the 22nd August Coverdale was summoned to appear before the privy council at Richmond, and on the 1st of September he made his appearance, when he was ordered to await the council's further pleasure. On the 28th of the same month Vezey was reinstated in the see of Exeter, on the pretence that his previous resignation had been extorted from him by terror. Coverdale, however, though ejected from his bishopric, was not like the rest of the distinguished reformers committed to prison, but was suffered to remain at large, only giving sureties to appear before the council whenever summoned to do so. Yet the fear of persecution did not induce him to swerve from his steadfastness in the reformed faith, for we discover that when, after the famous public disputation at Oxford between the popish divines and Cranmer, Ridley, and Latimer, the other imprisoned brethren signed a declaration, stating their views of truth, and avowing their resolution, "when they cannot obey, but must disobey God, then to submit themselves with all patience and humility, to suffer as the will and pleasure of the higher powers shall adjudge," the faithful Coverdale shrunk not from signing the document in the following manner, "To these things above said, I, Myles Coverdale, late of Exon, consent and agree with these mine afflicted brethren, being prisoners, with mine own hand." The heroes of the protestant faith just named nobly perished at the stake, but Coverdale, through the mercy of Divine Providence, was permitted to escape.

On the 4th February, 1555, Rogers was led to Smithfield, the first of the illustrious band who there ascended in "chariots of fire" to heaven. Fourteen days after Rogers's execution, Mary gave her permission to Coverdale to leave the country,—a very remarkable circumstance which requires explanation. He had married a lady who was sister to the wife of Macchabæus Alpinus, at that time chaplain to Christian II, king of Denmark, and professor of theology in the university of Copenhagen. He was a man of influence, and a favourite with the Danish sovereign, and through his intercession his royal master was induced to write to Mary on behalf of Coverdale. The king wrote on the 25th of April, 1554, soliciting the reformer's liberation and pardon, to which Mary replied, that Coverdale was under restraint simply on account of certain debts which he owed to the crown. The king rejoined, in a letter dated the 24th of September, that he was glad it was only a debt that occasioned difficulty, and added that, as the bishopric had not been enjoyed long enough to afford Coverdale the means of paying any thing, his majesty hoped that he would shortly be permitted to visit Denmark, and to "make declaration concerning the benefit of his welfare." Some months passed; Mary seemed unwilling to comply, but it would not do for her to disturb the friendly understanding which existed between the English and Danish courts, and therefore she tardily granted in the following February the king's request.

Mr. Anderson, in his valuable work on the Annals of the Bible, suggests that there was another circumstance which contributed to Coverdalc's escape.* During the trial of Rogers, Gardiner, who presided over the iniquitous tribunal, on hearing the protomartyr's observation, that the queen "would have done well enough but for Gardiner's council," declared "the queen went before me, and it was her own motion;" of the truth of which we have no doubt, for it is well known that Mary afterwards stimulated Bonner to his deeds of blood.† Mr. A. remarks, that Gardiner's assertion placed the queen before the country in one of the most critical of all positions as the sole and imperative persecutor; and he adds, "there can be no doubt from what followed, had made her tremble not only for herself, but the husband on whom she at this time doated." He alludes to the well known circumstance of a Spanish divine being appointed to preach against religious persecution as a miscrable artifice to lull the public mind; and then connects the permission given for Coverdale to leave the country with the examination of Rogers, as if it were intended by Mary to counteract the impression produced by Gardiner's remark. It certainly appears very inconsistent with this that the queen should, a few weeks afterwards, permit the work of persecution to be resumed, and doom more victims to the stake; ‡ and, as to the sermon of the Spanish friar, it seems to have been entirely a device of Philip's to remove odium from himself, who was suspected of intending to introduce the inquisition to England. There is no evidence of Mary's interfering in any way at this time to check the persecution, and soothe the minds of her subjects; and, as to the latter object, the release of Coverdale was too inconsiderable a circumstance to be likely to aid in its accomplishment. The interference of his Danish majesty was no doubt the main, if not the only, cause of the translator's liberation.

On the 19th of February, 1555, Coverdale obtained his passport, and embarked, no doubt with great joy, for the shores of Denmark. Soon after he was gone the lurid flames of persecution blazed over his native land, and sympathy with the sufferers for the truth, many of whom were doubtless well known to him, and well beloved, must have been mingled with his devout gratitude for the interposition of the Almighty in his escape. He was kindly received by the Danish king, through whose instrumentality he had escaped the "mouth of the lion;" and it is said that his majesty offered him a benefice in the church of Denmark: but Coverdale, unacquainted with the Danish tongue, and anxious to be employed in preaching the gospel, preferred to cast in his lot among some English exiles at Wesel in Friesland. After remaining there a short time, he returned to the former scene of his labours; and on the 15th of September arrived at Bergzabern, at the request of his old friend, Wolfgang, duke of Deux-ponts. On the 15th of December, 1558, we find him at Geneva, where he joined in writing* a letter to the church at Frankfort, congratulating them on the accession of Elizabeth to the English throne, and entrcating them to lay aside their present dissensions respecting ceremonial matters, the continuance of which would give so much joy to their enemies. The churches of the English exiles on the continent were at the time much distracted by controversics on points of ceremony and discipline; but there is no evidence of Coverdale having had any connection with them, save in the way indicated by the letter above noticed. It was in accordance with his gentle spirit to inculcate lessons of peace, though his well known attachment to the cause of scriptural truth evinced that he regarded the wisdom which cometh from above as "pure," and not permitting him to sacrifice principle in order to be "peaceable."

The name of Coverdale has sometimes been associated with the Genevan New Testament, published in 1557, but it is highly improbable that he was at Geneva so soon. The Genevan Testament, as appears from the preface, was the work of one person, a fact strangely overlooked by many authors, and this person there is good reason to believe was William Whittingham.† That he had some share in assisting the preparation of the Genevan Bible is not altogether improbable, as he was there a few months while the work was going on; but the principal part of the undertaking certainly rested with others, probably Whittingham, Gilby, and Sampson.‡

The accession of Elizabeth to the thronc of England was a signal for the return of the protestant exiles, and among the rest, Coverdale soon found his way to his native land. On the 12th of November, 1559, Coverdale again took his place in the old pulpit of St. Paul's Churchyard, where the friends of the Reformation now once more gladly assembled to hear the faithful and warmhearted instructions of their favourite teachers. The next notice of our reformer is discovered in connection with Archbishop Parker's consecration, in which ceremony Coverdale, with Barlow, Scory, Bale, and the suffragans of Bedford and Thetford, took a part. From this it would appear that Coverdale was still regarded as a bishop of the church of England, his deprivation in the reign of Mary being treated as illegal. It seems probable that the intention was to restore this old veteran to his diocese at Exeter, but that his conscientious scruples in reference to certain ceremonial matters enforced in the English church under Elizabeth, prevented him from enjoying his former dignity. At the consecration of Parker he appeared in a plain black gown, while his episcopal brethren were arrayed in surplices; and to the the end of his life it is well known that he retained his dislike to what he considered popish vestments. But though his conscience would not allow him fully to conform to the established order of things in the church, and he was thereby excluded from his former see, yet he does not seem to have relinquished his title to the episcopal character, for he signed himself throughout the rest of life, "Myles Coverdale, quondam Exoniensis."

Grindall, the bishop of London, was a friend to Coverdale. He sought to obtain for him the bishopric of Llandaff, looking upon him as a neglected man, and thinking perhaps that conformity to ecclesiastical laws about vestments might in his case be very well dispensed with. On the failure of other plans for his promotion and comfort, Grindall at length succeeded in making some provision for him by giving him the living of St. Magnus, near London-bridge. He was collated to the rectory on the 3rd of March, 1563; but poverty still clung to him, for he could not pay the firstfruits due to the queen. He wrote to Archbishop Parker the following letter on the subject.

"My duty considered in right humble and faithful wise. These are in like manner to beseech your grace, most reverend father, and my singular good lord, that as my good lord of London, tendering as well my weak and feeble age, as also my poor travail in God's husbandry within his diocese, hath most gently conferred upon me the benefice of St. Magnus in London, being in value an hundred marks or thereabouts * Troubles at Frankfort, p. 187. + See Introduction to English Hexapla, p. 84.

‡ This is Mr. Anderson's view, 'Annals,' Vol. II. p. 320, but he almost entirely excludes Coverdale from a share in the work. It is most likely that while in Geneva, he would he consulted about it, and would lend his valuable assistance. so it may please your grace to join with his lordship in suit for me to the queen's most excellent majesty, that in favourable consideration how destitute I have been of a competent living in the realm ever since my bishoprie was violently taken away from me. I being compelled to resign, and how I never had pension, annuity, or stipend of it, these ten years: how unable also I am either to pay the first-fruits, or long to enjoy the said benefice, going upon my grave, as they say, and not like to live a year. Her majesty, at the contemplation of such reverend, honourable, and worthy suitors, will most graciously grant me her warrant and discharge for the first-fruits of the said benefice. And as I am bold most humbly to crave your grace's help herein, so am I fully persuaded, God willing, to show myself again as thankful, and in my vocation, during my short time, as faithful and as quiet as I can. Thus having uttered my boldness, I most humbly commit your grace and all yours to the mighty protection of God. From London, Jan. 29. "MyL. Cov. quond. Exon."

The following letter relates to the same subject, and forms another affecting memorial of the poverty and sorrow of this eminent servant of Christ.

BISHOP COVERDALE to SIR WILLIAM CECIL.

"My duty considered in right humble wise unto your honour. These are in like manner to beseech the same, that whereas my lord of London, tendering as well mine age as my simple labours in the Lord's harvest, hath very gently offered me the pastoral office and benefice of St. Magnus in London; even so it may please your honour to be means for me to the Queen's most excellent Majesty, that in favourable consideration, not only how destitute I have been ever sith my bishopric was taken from me, and that I never had pension, annuity, or stipend of it these ten years and upward; but also how unable I am, either to pay the first-fruits, or long to enjoy the said living, I going upon my grave, not able to live over a year, her Majesty at the contemplation hereof may most graciously grant me the first-fruits of the said benefice, which her highness must needs have again anew, when I am gone.

"Heretofore (I praise God for it !) your honour hath over been my special help and succour in all my rightful suits. If now, that poor old Myles may be provided for, it please your honour to obtain this for me, I shall think this enough to be unto me as good as a feast. Thus most humbly beseeching your honour to take my boldness in good part, I commit you, and all yours, to the gracious protection of the Almighty. "From London, February 6th, [1564].

" Myles Coverdale, quond. Exon."

Poor Coverdale! His Divine Master, for wise and gracious purposes permitted him to struggle with many trials in his old age, for in the same year in which he was so teazed by poverty, he was smitten with the plague, from which, through the goodness of God, he was restored and was permitted to resume his ministerial labours. It might have been expected that the remainder of his days would be spent in the enjoyment of peace and honour. He was now settled in his rectory, beloved by his parishioners, and highly esteemed by the friends of the Reformation. The University of Cambridge, in the year 1563, had conferred on him the degree of Doctor of Divinity; and in the following year, had commissioned him as a deputy to confer a similar honour on Bishop Grindall; but despite of his piety, labours, usefulness, honour, and old age, this devoted servant of God was soon involved in difficulties again, owing to the stringent enforcement, by the ruling powers, of the ecclesiastical regulations relating to habits and ceremonies. A letter written on the 25th March, 1566, indicates that the veteran reformer was in trouble through his conscientious scruples about conformity to these regulations, and gives us some idea of his increasing infirmities.

BISHOP COVERDALE to the REV. MR. ROBINSON, CHAPLAIN to ARCHBISHOP PARKER.

"My duty considered in right humble and most hasty wise. Whereas, I am summoned to appear, with others, to-morrow afore my lord's grace, at Lambeth, I besecch your worthiness to be means for me unto his grace, that at this present I may be dispensed with; not only for that I am unwieldy, and could neither well travel by land, nor altogether safely by boat, but also for other considerations which this bearer, my dear friend, shall signify unto you by mouth. Thus being desirous of your gentle answer, I commend you and all yours to the gracious protection of God. March 25th, 1566.

"Your own in the Lord, "Myles Coverdale, quond. Exon." d

XXV

In the July of the same year he united with Humphrey and Sampson, two distinguished Puritans, in writing a letter to Farrell, Viret, Beza, and other divines on the continent, respecting the vestmentarian controversy, which, as it exhibits the opinions of Coverdale on the subject, and throws light upon his position at this time, we shall venture to insert, though it be rather long.

Myles Coverdale, Laurence Humphrey, and Thomas Sampson, to William Farrell, Peter Viret, Theodore Beza, and others.

"We must not only, honoured masters and brethren, appear troublesome to your reverences by so frequently addressing you by our friends and our letters, but must seem also very regardless of our duty to the church, by disturbing you, who are occupied in matters of far greater importance, with the relation of our trifles. But yet the unhappy condition of our times, and fresh troubles, compel us to have recourse to you, not only that you may be informed more fully of the state of our affairs, and our own opinions respecting them, but that we also may more fully understand your sentiments. Our affairs are not altered for the better, but alas! are sadly deteriorated. For it is now settled and determined, that an unleavened cake must be used in place of common bread; that the communion must be received by the people on their bended knees; that out of doors must be worn the square cap, bands, a long gown, and tippet; while the white surplice and cope are to be retained in divine service. And those who refuse to comply with these requirements, are deprived of their estates, dignities, and every ecclesiastical office; namely, brethren, by brethren and bishops, whose houses are at this time the prisons of some preachers; who are now raging against their own bowels; who are now imposing these burdens not only on their own persons, but also on the shoulders of others; and this too at a time when in the judgment of all learned men they ought to have been removed and abolished altogether. Thus you have the image and representation, such as it is, of our church. Now then, hear our opinion upon this state of things. We think that it must be assumed in this question, that the Jewish, Turkish, Christian, and Popish religions have each their own peculiar sacraments and signs; and that external profession ought to be the test and badge of any one's doctrine; and that we are to seek our pattern not out of the cisterns and puddles of our enemies, but from the fountain of the Scriptures, and of the churches of God; so as not to be connected by any similarity of rites with those from whose religion we are altogether abhorrent; which rule we read, was diligently observed by our forefathers in respect to the sabbath and passover of the Jews, the fastings of the Manichees, and the trine immersion of heretics. Nor, indeed, can we regard these things as altogether indifferent, when compulsion is made use of, and when too, they are branded with the mark of superstition; nor ought anything to be obtruded (on the church) by the authority of the sovereign, without its having been lawfully discussed in a Christian synod: nor ought agreement in ceremonies everywhere to be required of necessity, especially when it is in common with the enemies of the faith : nor is there any occasion in the church of Christ either for the Aaronic priesthood, or pharisaical ambition, that sacred garments should be worn now-a-days in the Christian temple, or that a dress not common, but distinct and peculiar, should be prescribed for ordinary use. But we think with Celestine, that the clergy should be distinguished from the people by their doctrine, not their garments; their conversation, not their dress; their purity of mind, not their adornment of person; lest we begin to hanker after novelties, tread under foot the order received from our forefathers, impose upon the minds and eyes of the simple, and make room for vain and unprofitable superstitions. Besides, as many of us as have cast out these things from the churches committed to our trust, cannot restore them without grievous offence and abominable impiety: and since a door would also be opened to other mysteries of iniquity, and the love of the godly be offended, and the pride and boldness of the wicked be encouraged, without even any pretence of edification; and since it is not lawful, according to St. Paul's rule respecting things indifferent, for every one to rest in his own persuasion, but that that should be regarded as lawful which is not displeasing to certain men; we considered it more for the good of the church to stand fast in our liberty with an accession of godly men on our side, than to depart from the opinion we have taken up, and the custom we have received, to the scandal of many, and the downfall of purer doctrine. This is our opinion, and also that of a most excellent personage. We now, most illustrious and very dear masters and brethren, request you by our most intimate communion in Christ, to point out the cynosure to us who are tossed about on the waves; and either to show us a better way if we are in error, or confirm us, when doubting, in our holy purpose. The question, we confess, is nice and difficult, whether it is better to yield to circumstances, or to depart; to admit the relics of the Amorites, or to desert our post? Either alternative is harsh, grievous, and productive of mischief both to ourselves and the church. Which is the better do you with your wonted wisdom declare, because we are lingering in suspense as in the last extremity. We also request of you and your brother ministers to put forth at the earliest opportunity some treatise on the nature of things indifferent, on ceremonies, on the sacerdotal habit; by which both our church and those of Saxony may be instructed, and the zeal of our sovereigns inspirited to the demolition of all the distinctive marks of antichrist. We make it, lastly, our request, that you would admonish our bishops by letter not to persecute Joseph on account of a garment; nor to rend the church with such a schism for so slight a cause; but that even in the dissimilarity of rites they may preserve the sweetest harmony of spirit and brotherly love. For far be it from us to think of them otherwise than as becomes friends and brethren. The sum is this. We request these three things; your reply to the questions here proposed by us, and some treatise to all the churches generally; a letter to the bishops privately, and, if you please, to such of her majesty's councillors as you may be acquainted with, so that this whole controversy may issue in a christian reconciliation, and not in a cruel separation. Communicate this letter to all your brethren, that we may hear what the Lord may speak out of the mouth of two or three witnesses. May the Lord Jesus preserve his church pure and inviolate even to the day of his just judgment! Your most devoted,

"MYLES COVERDALE, formerly bishop of Exeter, "LAURENCE HUMPHREY, "THOMAS SAMPSON."*

Coverdale forfeited his benefice by conscientiously refusing to obey the act of uniformity, but he still continued to preach. "Many of the people," says Strype, "ran after Father Coverdale, who took that occasion to preach the more constantly, but yet with much fear, so that he would not be known where he preached, though many came to his house to ask where he would preach the next Lord's day." He continued his labours till within a few months of his departure to a better world, which happened the 20th of May, 1567, in the 81st year of his age. He was buried in the church of St. Bartholomew, behind the Royal Exchange, and his funeral was attended by multitudes who revered his memory and bewailed his loss.

When the Church of St. Bartholomew was pulled down in 1840, careful search was made for Coverdale's remains: they were discovered in a grave within the chancel. A particular account of the exhumation was drawn up, from which it appears that the skeleton was perfect, the skull alone being decomposed. The coffin was removed to the church of St. Mary Magnus, and now the bones of the translator repose within the walls which one echoed with his voice.

BIBLIOGRAPHICAL DESCRIPTION

OF

THE ORIGINAL EDITION OF THIS BIBLE,

PRINTED IN 1535.

WHILE the reprint of this Bible cannot fail to be welcome to the public generally, there are many who, we feel certain, will not be dissatisfied to have some bibliographical details concerning so curious and valuable a work.

The book itself is printed in a very peculiar angular Swiss or German type. Its size is a small folio, and there is no name of place or printer in it.

The copies of this Bible known to exist, are those in the Libraries of the British Museum.—Bodleian. —Public Library, Cambridge.—King's College, Cambridge.—Sion College.—All Souls' College.—Trinity College, Dublin.—Lambeth Library.—Bapt. Mus. Bristol.—DUKE of SUSSEX.—Earl of Leicester.— Earl Jersey.—Earl Spencer.—Dr. Coombe.—The late William Coombes, Esq.—George Offor, Esq.— B. Harrison, Esq.—Rev. R. Daley.—Lea Wilson, Faq.; and Mr. Reed."

"Of seven copies of this edition," says Mr. Cotton, "which I have seen, that in the British Museum is the only one that has the title-page, and even that is made up from two copies. Of the others, the Bodleian copy is by far the finest." Not only is the title-page of the one in the Museum made up from two copies, but it is even made up from two separate wood-cuts of the same design; for in the one, the texts in the scrolls are in English, in the other, in Latin.

One perfect title-page, however, is in existence, and is found in the beautiful copy of this edition in the Earl of Leicester's library at Holkham. It is as follows :---

> "BIBLIA The Bible, that is, the holy Scripture of the Olde and fem Cestament, faith fully translated out of Douche and Latyn in to Onglishe. M.D.XXXV. S. Paul. II. Acssa. III. Douche and Latyn," was no doubt a bookselling artifice of the time, to make the work circulate better, as being intimately connected with the reformed doctrines, which were then equally well known by the term of German or Dutch doctrines. Nay, we are even told that the early reformers of that day were commonly called Germans, on account of their adoption of those reformed opinions which first sprung up in Germany. That Coverdale did not follow Luther's version, it only requires a very slight comparison of texts to prove; but he no doubt availed himself, where there occurred any difficult reading, of all the different means of assistance within his power, as indeed he himself intimatcs in his prologue to the reader.

The wood-cuts surrounding the title are the same as in the title-page of 1536, of which a facsimile is prefixed to the present reprint.

On the reverse of the title is, "The bokes of the whole Byble, how they are named in Englysh and Latyn, how longe they are wrytten in the allegacions, how many chapters euery boke hath, and in what leafe every one begynneth." It contains, however, only references to the first four parts; those to the Apocrypha and the New Testament were probably on another leaf, which is missing in this copy (the Museum one).

Then comes the dedication, "Vnto the most victorious Prynce and oure most gracyous soueraigne Lorde, kynge Henry the eyght, kynge of Englonde and of Fraunce, lorde of Irlonde, &c." signed "Youre graces humble subjecte and daylye oratour, Myles Couerdale." 5 pages. The Museum copy has "Quene Anne" in the dedication; Sion College has "Quene Jane;" Lambeth Library has a copy with each; the Bodleian has "Quene Anne;" All Souls' College has neither; Dr. Coombe's has neither; the late Mr. Coombes's has "Quene Anne."

Then "A prologe. Myles Couerdale Unto the Christen reader." 6 pages.

Then "The bokes of the hole Byble" &c., 2 pages. This is evidently part of another edition inserted in this copy (the Museum one), or rather this set of preliminary pieces do not belong to this title-page; since a portion of the same information is to be found printed on the reverse of the title-page.

The contents of "The first boke of Moses," 1 page.

"The first boke of Moses, called Genesis." Then should come, according to Herbert, a map of the Holy land. The four other books of Moses follow, with tables of contents prefixed to each: in all, fol. i—xc. Signature a i, to p vi, in sixes. The first leaf appears not to have any signature, or else it has been rubbed out in this copy (the Museum one), the second leaf being marked a ii.

Then comes a title-page: "The seconde parte of the olde Testament." with the names of the books contained underneath. This in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse "The boke of Josua. What this boke conteyneth." Joshua to Hester, fol. ii—cxx (the reverse of). Tables of contents at the commencement of each book. Signature a a ij, to v v vi, in sixes.

"The boke of Job," table of contents. "The Psalter." "The Prouerbes of Salomon," table of contents. "Ecclesiastes," table of contents. "Salomons Ballettes." From Job to Salomons Balettes, fol. i—lii. Signature A a, to Ji iiij, in sixes.

Then comes another title-page: "All the Prophetes in Englishe." with the names of the books contained, underneath. This in a comparment of woodcuts. On the reverse, the contents of "the Prophet Esay." The contents prefixed to each Prophet. In all, fol. ii—cii, (the reverse of). Signature A a a ij, to R r r vi, in sixes.

Another title-page: "Apocripha The bokes and treatises which amonge the fathers of olde are not rekened to be of like authorite with the other bokes of the byble, neither are they founde in the Canon of the Hebrue." Then follow the names of the books. At the bottom, "Vnto these also belongeth Baruc, whom we have set amoge the prophetes next vnto Jeremy, because he was his scrybe, and in his tyme." This in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse, "The translatoure vnto the reader." containing some observations on the nature of these books. Underneath the contents of the first book. The contents are prefixed to each book, except to "Certayne chapters of Hester." "The songe of the iij children." "The story of Susanna" and "The story of Bel," In all, fol. ii-lxxxiii (the reverse of), falsely numbered lxxxi. Signature A ij to O v, in sixes, the last leaf blank.

Then the title-page : "The new testament." underneath, the books named. Also in a compartment of wood-cuts. On the reverse, the contents of "The gospell of S. Mathew." The contents before each book. In all, fol. ii—cxiii (the reverse of). Signature AA ij, to TT v, in sixes.

On the reverse of the last leaf; "Prynted in the year of our LORDE M.D.XXXV. and fynished the fourth days of October."

At the beginning of Genesis are six cuts in wood, describing the six days' work of the creation; and in different parts of the work are other cuts, also in wood, some of them very spirited and well executed, representing the history therein mentioned, and most probably done, as before stated, by Sebald Behem of Nurembergh. There are also some initial letters of a very elegant character, from designs of Holbein.

This Bible, as will be seen by the above description, is divided into six parts, of which four have separate title-pages. That there should be no separate title-page to the first part is not strange, as it scarcely seemed to want one : but it is rather curious that there should be none to the third part; and that there never was any printed, and that it is not missing from the present copies, is clear, since the first leaf is numbered fol. i, which would not otherwise have been the case. The type, as before mentioned. is an angular Swiss or German. The title-page and its reverse are in the same letter as the body of the text. But the dedication, the prologue, the names of "the bokes of the whole Byble," and the contents of Genesis, are in a different character, and were most probably printed after the arrival of the volume in England. There are a few marginal references, which are in Roman letters. On fol. xli. of part I. is a large wood-cut of the Tabernacle and its contents; this is repeated on the reverse of fol. lvi. The initial letter of Genesis is a large flourished text capital. A full page contains fifty-seven lines.

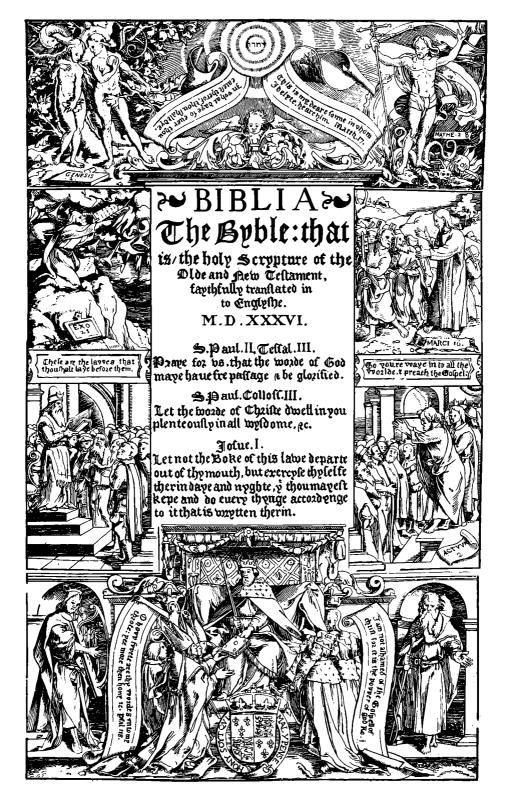

Whether this edition ever had a table of the Epistles and Gospels for the Sundays, &c. at the end, is not known. No copy has yet been found, that we are aware of, containing any such table; but it seems not improbable that it had, since we find one in the reprints in quarto and in folio, by Nicholson, in 1537; and also in the edition of 1550.

It is not known how many copies of this edition

were issued from the press, but the number must have been very great, when we consider that it was the first edition of the whole Bible in English ever offered to the public, at a time, when, excited by the writings daily put forth by the reformers, they were most eager to peruse it; and that Grafton, when he published Matthew's Bible in 1537, although of a much larger size, and consequently more expensive, ventured to print as many as 1500 copies.

This Bible was reprinted in folio and in quarto in 1537, by Nicholson, in Southwark, with a very few slight and triffing alterations. It was printed again in 1550, after which, what remained of the edition was issued in 1553, with a reprinted title-page and preliminary pieces. The edition of 1535 had a new titlepage in 1536, of which, as before stated, a facsimile is prefixed to this edition.

VNTO THE MOST VICTORIOUS PRYNCE AND OURE MOST GRACYOUS SOUERAIGNE LORDE,

KYNGE HENRY THE EYGHT,

KYNGE OF ENGLONDE AND OF FRAUNCE, LORDE OF IRLONDE. (0. DEFENDOUR OF THE FAYTH, AND VNDER GOD THE CHEFE AND SUPPREME HEADE OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLONDE.

¶ The ryght w iust administracyon of the lawes that God gaue vnto Moses and vnto Iosua : the testimonye of faythfulnes that God gaue of David : the plenteous abundaunce of wysdome that God gaue vnto Salomon : the lucky and prosperous age with the multiplicacyon of sede whiche God gaue vnto Abraham and Sara his wyfe, be geue vnto you most gracyous Prynce, with your dearest iust wyfe, and must vertuous Pryncesse, Quene Anne, Amen.

CAIPHAS beynge bysshope of that yeare, lyke a blynde prophete (not vnderstandyng what he sayd) prophecied,<sup> $\alpha$ </sup> that it was better to put Christ vnto death, then that all the people shulde perysshe: he meanyng, that Christ was an heretike, a deceauer of the people,  $\alpha$  a destroyer of the lawe, and that it was better therfore to put Christ vnto death, thā to suffre hym for to lyue, and to deceaue the people.  $\alpha$ c. where in very dede Christ was the true prophete, the true Messias, and the onely true Sauiour of the worlde, sent of his heauenly father to suffre the moste cruell, most shamefull, and most necessary death for our redempcyon: accordyng to y\* meanynge of the prophecie truely vnderstonde.

Euen after the same maner y• blynde bysshoppe of Rome, (that blynde Baalam I saye) not vnderstondynge what he dyd, gaue vnto your grace this tytle: Defendour of the fayth, onely bycause your hyghnes suffred your bysshoppes to burne Gods worde the rote of fuyth, and to persecute the louers and mynisters of y• same. where in very dede the blynde bysshoppe (though he knewe not what he dyd) prophecied, that by the ryghteous admynistracyon and contynuall diligence of youre grace, the fayth shulde so be defended, that Gods worde the mother of Fayth with the frutes therof, shulde haue his fre course thorowe out all Christendome, but specyally in your realme.

Yf your hyghnesse now of your pryncely benignite wyll pardon me to compare these two bysshoppes (I meane bysshoppe Caiphas and the bysshoppe of Rome) a theyr prophecies together, I doute not but we shal fynde them agree lyke brethren, though the one be a Iewe and the other a counterfayte Christian. Fyrst, Caiphas prophecied that it was better to put Christ vnto death, then that the people shulde perysshe. The bysshoppe of Rome also, not knowynge what he prophecied, gaue youre grace this tytle : Defendour of the fayth. The trueth of both these prophecies is of the holy goost (as was Baalams prophecie) though they that spake the, knewe not what they sayd. The trueth of Caiphas prophecie is, that it was necessary for mans saluacyon, that Christ by his death shulde ouercome death, and redeme vs. And the trueth of oure Baalams prophecie is, by your grace in very dede shulde defende the Fayth, Yee euen the true fayth of Christ, no dreames, no fables, no heresie, no papisticall inuencions, but the vncorrupte fayth of Gods most holy worde, which to set forth (praysed be the goodnes of God, and increace youre gracyous purpose) your hyghnes with youre most honorable councell, applyeth all his studye and endeuoure.

These two blynde bysshopes now agree in y• vnderstādyng of theyr prophecies: for Caiphas taketh Christ for an heretike, Oure Balaā taketh the worde of Christ for heresie. Caiphas iudgeth it to be a good dede to put Christ vnto death, that he shulde not deceaue the people. Oure Balaam calleth defendynge of the fayth, the suppressyng, kepyng secrete, and burnyng of the worde of fayth : lest the lyght thereof shulde vtter his darknes : lest his owne Decretales g Decrees, his owne lawes and constitucions, his owne statutes and inuencions shulde come to none effecte: lest his intollerable exactions and vsurpacions shulde lose theyr strengthe : lest it shulde be knowen what a thefe and murtherer he is in the cause of Christ, and how haynous a traytoure to God and man in defraudynge all Christen kynges g prynces of theyr due obedience: lest we youre graces subjectes shulde haue eyes in the worde of God, at the last to spye out his crafty conueyauce and iuglynges : and lest men shulde se, how sore he and his false Apostles haue deceaued all Christendome, specyally youre noble realme of Englonde.

Thus your grace seyth how brotherly the Iewysh bysshoppe and oure Balaam agree together, not onely in myter and outwarde appearaunce : but as the one persecuted the Lorde Iesus in his owne persone, so doth the other persecute his worde and resysteth his holy ordynaunce in the auctorite of his anoynted kynges. For so moche nowe as the worde of God is the onely trueth that dryueth awaye all lyes, and discloseth all iuglyng and disceate, therfore is oure Balaam of Rome so lothe that the scripture shulde be knowe in the mother tonge: lest yf kynges and prynces (specially aboue all other) were exercysed therin, they shulde reclame and chalenge agayne theyr due auctorite, which he falsely hath vsurped so many yeres, and so to tye hym shorter : and lest the people beyng taught by the worde of God, shulde fall from ye false fayned obediece of hym and his disguysed Apostles, vnto the true obedience commaunded by Gods owne mouthe: as namely, to obey theyr prynce, to obey father and mother. gc. and not to steppe ouer father and mothers bely to enter in to his paynted religions, as his ypocrites teache : For he knoweth well ynough, that yf the cleare Sonne of Gods worde come ones to the heate of the daye, it shal dryue awaye all the foule myst of his deuelysh doctrines. Therfore were it more to the mayntenaunce of Antichristes kyngdome, that the worlde were styll in ignoraunce and blyndnes, and that the scripture shulde neuer come to lyghte. For the scripture (both in the olde testament and in the new) declareth most aboutdauntly that the office, auctorite and power geuen of God vnto kynges, is in earth aboue all other powers: let them call the selues Popes, Cardynalles, or what so euer they will, "the worde of god declareth them (yee and commaundeth them vnder payne of dampnacion) to be obedient vnto the temporall swerde : As in the olde Testament all the Prophetes, Prestes and Leuites were. And in the new Testament 'Christ & his Apostles both were obedient them selues, and taught obedience of all men vnto theyr prynces ad temporall rulers: which here vnto vs in the worlde present the persone of God, and are called 'Goddes in the scripture, bycause of the excellecy of theyr office. And though there were no mo auctorities but the same, to proue the peminence of the temporall swerde, Yet by this the scripture declareth playnly, that as there is nothyng aboue God, so is there no man aboue the kynge in his realme but that he onely vnder God is the chefe heade of all the cogregacyon and church of the same. And in token that this is true, there hath ben of olde antiquite (and is yet vnto this daye) a louynge ceremonye vsed in your realme of Englonde, yt wha your graces subjectes reade your letters, or begynne to talke or come of your hyghnes, they moue theyr bonettes for a signe a token of reuerence vnto your grace, as to their most soueraigne lorde g heade vnder God. which thyng no man vseth to do to eny bysshoppe. wherby (yf oure vnderstondyng were nat blynded) we myght euydently perceaue, that euen very nature teacheth vs the same, that scripture comaudeth vs: and that lyke as it is agaynst Gods worde that a kynge shulde not be the chefe heade of his people, euen so (I saye) is it agaynst kynde that we shulde knowe any other heade aboue hym vnder God.

And that no prest nor bysshoppe is exempte (nor can be lawfully) from the obedience of his prynce, the scripture is full both of strayte comaundemetes, g practises of the holyest men. *Aaron was obedient vnto Moses, and called hym his lorde, though he was his owne brother. <sup>a</sup> Eleasar and Phineas were vnder the obediece of Iosua. *Nathan the prophete fell downe to the grounde before kynge Dauid, he had his Prynce in such reuerence (He made not the kynge for to kysse his fote as the bysshoppe of Rome maketh Emperours to do) Notwithstondynge he spared not to rebuke hym, and that ryght sharply whan he fell from the worde of God to adultery a manslaughter. For he was not afrayed to reproue hym of his sinnes, nomore than Helyas the prophete stode in feare to saye vnto kynge Achab: +It is thou and thy fathers house that trouble Israel, because ye haue forsaken y° commaundementes of the Lorde, and walke after Baal. And as Johan Baptyste durst saye vnto Kynge Herode: "It is not lawful for the to take thy brothers wyfe. But to my purpose I passe ouer innumerable mo ensaples both of the olde Testament and of the new, for feare lest I be to tedyous vnto your grace. Suna, in all godly regimentes of olde tyme the kynge and teporall iudge was obeyed of cuery man, and was alwaye vnder God the chefe and suppreme heade of the whole congregacyon, 'and deposed euen prestes whan he sawe an vrgent cause, as Salomon dyd vnto Abiathar. who coulde than stonde agaynst the godly obedience of his prynce (excepte he wolde be at defyaunce with God and all his holy ordinaunces) that were well acquaynted with the holy scripture, which so earnestly comendeth vnto euery one of vs the auctorite and power genen of God vnto kynges and temporall rulers? Therfore doth Moses so strately d forbyde the Israelites to speake so moche as an euell worde agaynst the prynce of y' people, moche lesse than to disobeye hym, or to withstonde hym. Doth not 'Ieremy the prophete and J Baruc also exhorte the people in captinite, to praye for the prosperous welfare of the kynge of Babilon, and to obeye hym, though he was an infidele? In the new Testament wha oure saujoure Christ (beyng yet fre a Lorde of al kynges ( prynces) shewed his obedience in payenge the trybute to oure ensample, ‡dyd he not a miracle there in puttynge the pece of money in the tysshes mouth (that Peter myght paye the customer therwith) and all to stablysshe the obedience due vnto prynces ? § Dyd not Ioseph and Mary the mother of our sauiour Christ departe fro Nazareth vnto Bethlee, so farre from home, to showe theyr obedience in payenge the taxe to the prynce? And wolde not oure Sauioure be borne in the same obedience ? || Doth not Paule pronounce hym to resyste God hym selfe, that resysteth the auctorite of his prynce? And (to be shorte) the Apostle Peter <sup>s</sup> dothe not onely stablysshe the obedience vnto prynces and temporall rulers but affirmeth playnly the kynge (and no bysshoppe) to be the chefe heade. Innumerable places mo are there in scripture, which bynde vs to the obedience of oure prynce, and declare vnto vs, that no man is nor can be lawfully excepte from the same: but that all the mynisters of Goddes worde are vnder the teporall swerde: a Prynces onely to owe obedience vnto God a his worde.

And where as Anthichrist vnto youre graces tyme dyd thrust his heade into ye imperiall crowne of your hyghnes (as he doth yet with other noble prynces mo) that lerned he of Satha the authour of pryde, and therin doth he both agaynst the doctryne also agaynst ye ensample of Christe : whiche because his kyngdome was not of this worlde, medled with no temporall matters, as it is euydent both by his wordes and practyse: Luc. xii. # MYLES COUERDALE VNTO THE CHRISTEN READER.

NONSIDERYNGE how excellent knowlege and / lernynge an interpreter of scripture oughte to haue in the tongues, and ponderyng also myne owne insufficiency therin, g how weake I am to perfourme y° office of a translatoure, I was the more lothe to medle with this worke. Notwithstondynge whan I cosydered how greate pytie it was that we shulde wante it so longe, a called to my remembraunce ye aduersite of them, which were not onely of rype knowlege, but wolde also with all theyr hertes haue perfourmed y' they beganne, yf they had not had impediment: considerynge (I saye) that by reason of theyr aduersyte it coulde not so soone haue bene broughte to an ende, as oure most prosperous nacyon wolde fayne haue had it: these and other reasonable causes consydered, I was the more bolde to take it in hande. And to helpe me herin, I haue had sondrye translacions, not onely in latyn, but also of the Douche interpreters : whom (because of theyr synguler gyftes g speciall diligence in the Bible) I haue ben the more glad to folowe for the most parte, accordynge as I was requyred. But to saye the trueth before God, it was nether my laboure ner desyre, to haue this worke put in my hande: neuertheles it greued me y' other nacyos shulde be more plenteously prouyded for with y° scripture in theyr mother tongue, then we: therfore whan I was instantly requyred, though I coulde not do so well as I wolde, I thought it yet my dewtye to do my best, and that with a good wyll.

where as some men thynke now  $y^{\epsilon}$  inany translacyons make diuisyon in  $y^{\epsilon}$  fayth and in the people of God,  $y^{t}$  is not so: for it was neuer better with the congregacion of god, then whan euery church allmost had  $y^{\epsilon}$  Byble of a sondrye trāslacion. Amonge the Grekes had not Origen a specyall translacyon ? Had not Vulgarius one peculyar,  $\mathbf{g}$  lykewyse Chrysostom ? Besyde the seuentye interpreters, is there not the translacyon of Aquila, of Theodotio, of Symachus, and of sondrye other ? Agayne amonge the Latyn men, thou findest  $y^{t}$  euery one allmost vsed a specyall g sondrye translacyon: for in so moch as euery bysshoppe had the knowlege of y\* tongues, he gaue his diligence to haue the Byble of his awne translacion. The doctours, as Hireneus, Cyprianus, Tertullian, S. Iherom, S. Augustine, Hylarius g S. Ambrose vpon dyuerse places of the scripture, reade not y\* texte all alyke.

Therfore oughte it not to be taken as eucl, y' soch men as haue vnderstondynge now in oure tyme, exercyse them selues in ye tongues, a geue their diligence to translate out of one language in to another. Yee we ought rather to geue god hye thankes therfore, which thorow his sprete stereth vp mes myndes, so to exercise them selues therin. wolde god it had neuer bene left of after ye tyme of S. Augustine, then shulde we neuer haue come in to soch blindnes & ignorauce, in to soch erroures g delusyons. For as soone as the Byble was cast asyde, I nomore put in exercyse, then beganne euery one of his awne heade to wryte what so euer came in to his brayne and y' semed to be good in his awne eyes : and so grewe ye darknes of mēs tradicios. And this same is ye cause ye we haue had so many wryters, which seldome made mecyon of ye scripture of the Byble : a though they some tyme aleged it, yet was it done so farre out of season g so wyde from ye purpose, that a mā maye well perceaue, how that they neuer sawe the oryginall.

Seynge then  $y^t$  this diligent exercyse of translatynge doth so moch good  $\mathfrak{g}$  edifyeth in other languages, why shulde it do euell in oures? Doutles lyke as all nacyons in  $y^e$  dyuersite of speaches maye knowe one God in the vnyte of faith, and be one in loue: euen so maye dyuerse translacyons vnderstonde one another,  $\mathfrak{g}$  that in the head articles  $\mathfrak{g}$  grounde of oure most blessed faith, though they vse sondrye wordes. wherfore me thynke we haue greate occasyon to geue thankes vnto God, that he hath opened vnto his church the gyfte of interpretacyon  $\mathfrak{g}$  of pryntyng, and that there are now at this tyme so many, which with soch diligēce and faithfulnes interprete  $y^e$  scripture to the honoure of god and edifyenge of his people, where as (lyke as whan many are shutynge together) euery one doth his best to be nyest the marke. And though they can not all attayne therto, yet shuteth one nyer then another, and hytteth it better then another, yee one can do it better thē another. who is now then so vnreasonable, so despytefull, or enuyous, as to abhorre him y<sup>4</sup> doth all his diligence to hytte y<sup>4</sup> prycke, and to shute nyest it, though he mysse G come not nyest the mark? Ought not soch one rather to be commēded, and to be helped forwarde, that he maye exercyse himselfe the more therin ?

For the which cause (acordyng as I was desyred) I toke the more vpon me to set forth this speciall translacyon, not as a checker, not as a reprouer, or despyser of other mens translacyons (for amonge many as yet I have founde none without occasyon of greate thankesgenynge vnto god) but lowly & faythfully haue I folowed myne interpreters, & that vnder correccyon. And though I have fayled eny where (as there is noman but he mysseth in some thynge) loue shall constyrre all to y* best without eny peruerse iudgment. There is noman lyuynge y' can se all thynges, nether hath god geuen eny man to knowe euery thynge. One seyth more clearly then another, one hath more vnderstondyng then another, one can vtter a thynge better then another, but noman ought to enuye, or dispyse another. He that can do better then another, shulde not set him at naught yt vnderstondeth lesse: Yee he that hath y* more vuderstondyng, ought to remembre that the same gyfte is not his but Gods, and y' God hath geue it him to teach a, enfourme the ignoraunt. Yf thou hast knowlege therfore to judge where eny faute is made, I doute not but thou wilt helpe to amende it, yf loue be ioyned with thy knowlege. Howbeit wherin so euer I can perceaue by my selfe, or by the informacyon of other, that I haue fayled (as it is no wonder) I shall now by the helpe of God ouerloke it better ( amende it.

Now wil I exhorte the (who so euer thou be  $y^t$ readest scripture) yf thou fynde oughte therin y' thou vuderstondest not, or that apeareth to be repugnaunt, K<sup>eue</sup> no temerarious ner haystye iudgmēt therof: but uscrybe it to thyne awne ignoraunce, not to the scrypture, thynke y' thou vnderstondest it not, or y' it hath some other meanynge, or y' it is happlye ouersene of y' interpreters, or wronge prynted. Agayne, it shall greately helpe y' to vnderstonde scripture, yf thou marke not onely what is spoken or wrytten, but of whom, g vnto whom, with what wordes, at what tyme, where, to what intent, with what circumstaunce, consyderynge what goeth before, and what foloweth after. For there be some thynges which are done a wrytte, to the intente y' we shulde do lykewyse : as whan Abraham beleueth God, is obedient vnto his worde, g defendeth Loth his kynsman from violent wronge. There be some thynges also which are wrytte, to the intente y' we shulde eschue soch lyke. As whan Dauid lyeth with Vrias wyfe, a causeth him to be slayne. Therfore (I saye) whan thou readest scripture, be wyse & circumspecte : & whan thou commest to soch straunge maners of speakynge 🕻 darke sentences, to soch parables 🐧 similitudes, to soch dreames or vysions as are hyd from thy vnderstondynge, comytte them vnto God or to the gyfte of his holy sprete in them y' are better lerned then thou.

As for the commendacyon of Gods holy scripture, I wolde fayne magnifye it as it is worthy, but I am farre vnsufficiët therto.  $\mathfrak{C}$  therfore I thoughte it better for me to holde my tonge, then with few wordes to prayse or commede it: exhortynge  $y^{\mathfrak{e}}$  (most deare reader) so to loue it, so to cleue vnto it,  $\mathfrak{C}$  so to folowe it in thy daylye conuersacyon,  $y^{\mathfrak{t}}$  other men seynge thy good workes  $\mathfrak{C}$  the frutes of  $y^{\mathfrak{e}}$  holy goost in the, maye prayse the father of heauen,  $\mathfrak{C}$  geue his worde a good reporte: for to lyue after the lawe of God,  $\mathfrak{C}$  to leade a vertuous conuersacyon, is the greatest prayse  $v^{\mathfrak{t}}$  thou canst geue vnto his doctryne.

But as touchynge the euell reporte and disprayse that the good worde of God hath by the corrupte and euell conuersacyon of some, y' daylye heare it and professe it outwardly with theyr mouthes, I exhorte y" (most deare reader) let not y' offende the ner withdrawe thy mynde fro the loue of ye trueth, nether moue y° to be partaker in lyke vnthankfulnes: but seynge y<sup>e</sup> lighte is come in to the worlde, loue nomore the workes of darknes, receaue not the grace of god in vayne. Call to thy remembraunce how louynge C mercifull God is vnto the, how kyndly and fatherly he helpeth the in all trouble, teacheth thyne ignoraunce, healeth the in all thy sycknesse, forgeueth the all thy synnes, fedeth y°, geueth the drynke, helpeth y" out of preson, norysheth the in straunge countrees, careth for the, g seyeth y' thou wante nothynge. Call this to mynde (I save) & that earnestly, and consydre how thou hast receaued of god all these benefites (yee and many mo then thou canst desyre) how thou art bounde lykewise to shewe thy selfe vnto thy neghboure as farre as thou canst, to teach him yf he be ignoraunt, to helpe him in all his trouble, to heale his sycknes, to forgeue him his offences, and that hartely, to fede him, to cherish him, to care for him, and to se y' he wante nothyng. And on this behalfe I beseke the (thou y' hast y' ryches of this worlde, and louest God with thy harte) to lyfte vp thyne eyes, and se how greate a multitude of poore people renne thorow every towne: have pitie on thyne awne flesh, helpe them with a good harte, and do with thy councell all that euer thou canst, that this vnshamefast beggynge maye be put downe, that these ydle folkes may be set to laboure,  $\sigma$  that soch as are not able to get theyr lyuynge, maye be prouyded for. At the leest thou y' art of councell with soch as are in auctoryte, geue them some occasyon to cast theyr heades together, and to make prouvsyon for the poore. Put the in remembraunce of those noble cityes in other countrees, that by the auctoryte of theyr prynces haue so rychely ad well prouided for theyr poore people, to the greate shame a deshonestye of vs, yf we lykewyse receauynge ye worde of God, shewe not soch lyke frutes therof. wolde God y' those men (whose office is to maynteyne y' comon welth) were as diligent in this cause as they are in other. Let vs bewarre by tymes, for after vnthankfulnes there foloweth euer a plage : the mercyful hande of God be with vs, g defende vs that we be not partakers therof.

Go to now (most deare reader) a syt the downe at the Lordes fete and reade his wordes, C ("as Moses teacheth the Iewes) take them in to theyr herte, a let thy talkynge a communicacion be of them whan thou syttest in thyne house, or goest by ye waye, whan thou lyest downe, a whan thou ryseth vp. And aboue all thynges fasshyon thy lyfe, ( couersacion acordyng to the doctryne of the holy goost therin, that thou mayest be partaker of y<sup>e</sup> good promyses of god in the Byble, a be heyre of his blessynge in Christ. In whom yf thou put thy trust, c be an vnfayned reader or hearer of hys worde with thy hert, thou shalt fynde swetenesse theryn, a spye woderous thynges, to thy vnderstondynge, to the auoydynge of all sedicyous sectes, to the abhorrynge of thy olde synfull lyfe, a to the stablyshynge of thy godly conuersacyon.

In the first boke of Moses (called Genesis) thou mayest lerne to knowe the almightye power of god in creatynge all of naught, his infinite wysdome in ordryng the same, his ryghteousnes in punyshynge y<sup>o</sup> vngodly, his loue  $\mathfrak{g}$  fatherly mercy in comfortynge the righteous with his promes.  $\mathfrak{gc.}$

In the seconde boke (called Exodus) we se the myghtye arme of god, in delyuerynge his people from so greate bondage out of Egypte, and what prouysyon he maketh for them in the wildernes, how he teacheth them with his wholsome worde and how the Tabernacle was made and set vp.

In the thyrde boke (called Leuiticus) is declared what sacrifices the prestes  $\mathfrak{g}$  Leuites vsed, and what theyr office  $\mathfrak{g}$  ministracyon was.

In the fourth boke (called Numerus) is declared how the people are nombred and mustred, how the captaynes are chosen after y<sup>e</sup> trybes  $\mathfrak{g}$  kynreds, how they wete forth to y<sup>e</sup> battayll, how they pitched theyr tentes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  how they brake vp.

The fyfth boke (called Deuteronomium) sheweth how that Moses now beynge olde, rehearseth the lawe of god vnto y<sup>e</sup> people, putteth them in remembraunce agayne of all the wonders g benefites that god had shewed for them, and exhorteth them earnestly to loue y<sup>e</sup> Lorde theyr god, to cleue vnto him, to put their trust in him and to herken vnto his voyce.

After the death of Moses doth Iosue brynge the people in to the lode of promes where God doth wonderous thynges for his people by Iosue, which distributeth y° londe vnto them, vnto euery trybe theyr possession. But in theyr wealth they forgat the goodnes of God, so that oft tymes he gaue the ouer in to the hande of theyr enemies. Neuertheles whan so euer they called faithfully vpon him, and conuerted, he delyuered them agayne, as the boke of Iudges declareth.

In the bokes of the kynges, is descrybed the regiment of good and euell prynces, and how the decaye of all nacions commeth by euel kynges. For in Ieroboam thou seyst what myschefe, what ydolatrye q soch like abhominacyon foloweth, whā the kynge is a maynteyner of false doctryne, ād causeth the people to synne agaynst God, which fallinge awaye from gods worde, increased so sore amonge them, that it was the cause of all theyr sorowe and misery, q the very occasion why Israel first and then Iuda, were caryed awaye in to captyuite. <sup>b</sup>Agayne, in Iosaphat, in Ezechias and in Iosias thou seyst the nature of a vertuous kynge. He putteth downe the houses of ydolatrye, seyth that his prestes teach nothynge but y' lawe of God, comaundeth his lordes to go with them, and to se that they teach the people. In these kynges (I saye) thou seyst the codicyon of a true defender of y° fayth, for he spareth nether cost ner laboure, to manteyne the lawes of God, to seke the welth I prosperite of his people, and to rote out the wicked. And where soch a prince is, thou seyst agayne, how God defendeth him and his people, though he haue neuer so many enemyes. Thus wente it with the in the olde tyme, and euen after y' same maner goeth it now with vs: God be praysed therfore, ad graunte vs of his fatherly mercy, that we be not vnthankfull: lest where he now geueth vs a losaphat, an Ezechias, yee a very Iosias, he sende vs a Pharao, a Ieroboam, or an Achab.

In the two first bokes of Esdras q in Hester thou seyst the delyueraunce of the people, which though they were but fewe, yet is it vnto vs all a speciall coforte, for so moch as God is not forgetfull of his promes, but bryngeth them out of captivite, acordynge as he had tolde them before.

In the boke of Iob we lerne comforte and pacience, in that God not onely punysheth the wicked, but proueth g tryeth the iust and righteous (howbeit there is noman innocent in his sighte) by dyuerse troubles in this lyfe, declaryng therby, y' they are not his bastardes, but his deare sonnes, and that he loueth them.

In the Psalmes we lerne how to resorte onely vnto God in all oure troubles, to seke helpe at him, to call onely vpon him, to satle oure myndes by pacièce, g how we ought in prosperite to be thankfull vnto him.

The Prouerbes and the Preacher of Salomon teach vs wysdome, to knowe God, oure owne selues, and the worlde, and how vayne all thynges are, saue onely to cleue vnto God.

As for the doctryne of the Prophetes, what is it els, but an earnest exhortacion to eschue synne,  $\mathfrak{g}$  to turne vnto God? a faythfull promes of the mercy  $\overline{\mathfrak{ad}}$  pardon of God, vnto all them y<sup>t</sup> turne vnto him, and a threatenyng of his wrath to the vngodly? sauynge that here and there they prophecye also manifestly of Christ, of y\* expulsion of the Iewes, and callynge of the Heythen.

Thus moch thought I to speake of y<sup>o</sup> olde Testament, wherin almyghtie God openeth vnto vs his myghtye power, his wysdome, his louynge mercy g righteousnesse; for the which cause it oughte of no man to be abhorred, despysed, or lyghtly regarded, as though it were an olde scripture y<sup>t</sup> nothyng beloged vnto vs, or y<sup>t</sup> now were to be refused. For it is Gods true scripture g testimony, which the Lorde Iesus "commaundeth the Iewes to search. who so euer beleueth not the scripture, beleueth not Christ, and who so refuseth it, refuseth God also.

The New Testament or Gospell, is a manyfest and cleare testymony of Christ how God perfourmeth his ooth and promes made in the olde Testament, how the New is declared and included in the Olde, and the Olde fulfylled and verifyed in the New.

Now where as the most famous interpreters of all geue sondrye iudgmentes of the texte (so farre as it is done by y° sprete of knowlege in the holy goost) me thynke noman shulde be offended there at, for they referre theyr doinges in mekenes to the sprete of trueth in the congregacyon of god:  ${\tt G}$  sure I am, that there commeth more knowlege and vnderstondinge of the scripture by theyr sondrie translacyons, then by all the gloses of oure sophisticall doctours. For that one interpreteth somthynge obscurely in one place, the same translateth another (or els he him selfe) more manifestly by a more playne vocable of the same meanyng in another place. Be not thou offended therfore (good Reader) though one call a scrybe, that another calleth a lawyer: or elders, that another calleth father g mother: or repentaunce, that another calleth pennaunce or amendment. For yf thou be not disceaued by mens tradicions, thou shalt fynde nomore dyuersite betwene these termes then betwene foure pens and a grote. And this maner haue I vsed in my translacyon, callyng it in some place pennaunce, that in another place I call repentaunce, and that not onely because the interpreters haue done so before me, but that the aduersaries of the trueth maye se, how that we abhorre not this worde penaunce (as they vntruly reporte of vs) no more then the interpreters of latyn abhorre penitere, whan they reade resipiscere. Onely our hertes desyre vnto God, is, that his people be not blynded in theyr vnderstondyng, lest they beleue pennaunce to be ought saue a very repetaunce, amedment, or conversyon vnto God, and to be an vnfayned new creature in Christ, and to lyue acordyng to his lawe. For els shall they fal in to the olde blasphemy of Christes bloude, and beleue, that they the selues are able to make satisfaccion vnto God for theyr awne synnes, from the which erroure god of his mercy and pleteous goodnes preserue all his.

Now to conclude : for so moch as all the scripture is wrytten for thy doctryne g ensample, it shalbe necessary for the, to take holde vpon it, whyle it is offred the, yee and with ten handes thankfully to receaue it. And though it be not worthely ministred vnto the in this translacyon (by reason of my rudnes) Yet yf thou be feruet in thy prayer, God shal not onely sende it the in a better shappe, by the mynistracyon of other that beganne it afore, but shall also moue the hertes of them, which as yet medled not withall, to take it in hande, and to bestowe the gifte of theyr vnderstondynge theron, as well in oure language as other famous interpreters do in other languages. And I praye God, that thorow my poore ministracyon here in, I maye geue them that can do better, some occasyon so to do: exhortyng the (most deare reader) in the meane whyle on Gods behalfe, yf thou be a heade, a Iudge, or ruler of ye people, that thou "let not the boke of this lawe departe out of thy mouth, but exercise thyselfe therin both daye and nyghte, and be euer readyng in it as longe as thou lyuest: that thou mayest lerne to feare the Lorde thy God, I not to turne asyde from the commaundement, nether to the right hande ner to the lefte : lest thou be a knower of personnes in judgmet, and wrest the righte of the straunger, of the fatherles or of the wedowe, and so ye curse to come vpon the. But what office so euer thou hast ' wayte vpon it, and execute it, to the mayntenaunce of peace, to the welth of thy people, defendyuge the lawes of God, and the louers therof, and to the destruccyon of the wicked.

Yf thou be a man that hast wyfe and childre, first floue thy wyfe, acordynge to the ensample of the loue, wherwith Christ loued the cogregacion, and remembre that so doynge, thou louest euen thyselfe : vf thou hate her, thou hatest thine awne flesh : yf thou cherishe her and make moch of her, thou cherisest a makest moch of thyselfe, for she is bone of thy bones, of flesh of thy flesh. And who so euer thou be that hast children, <sup>s</sup> bryng them vp in the nurtour and informacion of the Lorde. And yf thou be ignoraunt, or art otherwyse occupied laufully that thou canst not teach them thy selfe, then be euen as diligent to seke a good master for thy childre, as thou wast to seke a mother to beare them: for there lieth as great weight in the one as in ye other. Yee better it were for the to be vnborne, then not to feare God, or to be eucl brought vp. which thynge (I meane bryngynge vp well of children) yf it be diligently loked to, it is the vpholdinge of all comon welthes: and the negligence of the same, the very decaye of all realmes.

Fynally, who so euer thou be, take these wordes of scripture in to thy herte, and be not onely an outwarde hearer, but a doer therafter, and practyse thyselfe therin: that thou mayest fele in thine hert, the swete promyses therof for thy consolacion in all trouble, a for the sure stablyshinge of thy hope in Christ, and haue euer an eye to y° wordes of scripture, that yf thou be a teacher of other thou mayest be within the boundes of the trueth, or at the leest though thou be but an hearer or reader of another mans doynges, thou mayest yet haue knowlege to judge all spretes, and be fre from euery erroure, to the vtter destruccion of all sedicious sectes a straunge doctrynes, that the holy scrypture maye haue fre passage, and be had in reputacion, to the worshippe of the author therof, which is euen God himselfe : to whom for his most blessed worde be glory a domynion now a euer. Amen.

A

In  $\mathring{y}$  begynnynge God created heauen  $\mathfrak{g}$ earth: and  $\mathring{y}$  earth was voyde and emptie, and darcknes was vpon the depe,  $\mathfrak{g}$   $\mathring{y}$  sprete of God moued vpō the water.

And God sayde: let there be light, a there was light. And God sawe the light that it was good. Then God deuyded ŷ light from the darcknes, and called the light, Daye: and the darcknes, Night. Then of the euenynge and mornynge was made the first daye.

And God sayde: let there be a firmament betwene the waters, and let it deuyde  $\mathring{y}$  waters a sunder. Then God made  $\mathring{y}$  firmamēt, and parted the waters vnder the firmamēt, from the waters aboue the firmament: And so it came to passe. And God called  $\mathring{y}$  firmament, Heauen. Then of the euenynge t mornynge was made the seconde daye.

"And God sayde: let the waters vnder heauen gather the selues vnto one place, y the drye londe maye appeare. And so it came to passe. And God called y drye londe, Earth: and the gatheringe together of waters called he, y See. And God sawe y it was good.

And God sayde: let § earth bringe forth grene grasse and herbe, that beareth sede: g frutefull trees, that maye beare frute, euery one after his kynde, hauynge their owne sede in them selues vpon the earth. And so it came to passe. And the earth brought forth grene grasse and herbe, § beareth sede euery one after his kynde, g trees bearinge frute, g hauynge their owne sede in them selues, euery one after his kynde. And God sawe that it was good. Then of the euenynge g mornynge was made the thirde daye.

And God sayde : let there be lightes in $ firmament of heauen, to deuyde the daye fro the night, that they maye be vnto tokes, seasons, dayes, and yeares. And let them be lightes in § firmament of heauen, to shyne vpon the earth: And so it came to passe. And God made two greate lightes: one greater light to rule the daye, and a lesse light to rule the night, and (he made) starres And God set them in the firmament of also. heauen, y they might shyne vpo earth, and to rule the daye and the night, and to deuyde the light from darcknes. And God sawe that Then of the euenynge and it was good. mornynge was made the fourth daye.

<sup>b</sup> And God sayde: let the waters brynge  $\mathfrak{C}$  forth creatures that moue and haue life,  $\mathfrak{g}$  foules for to flye aboue the earth vnder the firmamet of heauen. And God created greate whalles, and all maner of creatures that lyue and moue, which the waters brought forth euery one after his kynde: and all maner of fethered foules, euery one after his kynde. And God sawe that it was good, and blessed them, sayenge: Growe, and multiplie, and fyll the waters of the sees, and let the foules multiplie vpon the earth. Then of the euen-ynge and mornynge was made the fifth daye.

And God sayde: let § earth brynge forth lyuynge soules, euery one after his kynde: catell, wormes g what as hath life vpon earth, euery one after his kynde. And so it came to passe. And God made § beastes of the earth euery one after his kynde, and catell after their kynde, and all maner wormes of the earth after their kynde. And God sawe that it was good.

And God sayde: let vs make man in oure similitude after oure licknesse, that he maye haue rule ouer the fysh of the see, and ouer the foules vnder  $\mathring{y}$  heauen, and ouer catell, and ouer all the earth, and ouer all wormes that crepe on  $\mathring{y}$  earth. "And God created man after his licknesse: after  $\mathring{y}$  licknesse of God created he him, male  $\mathfrak{g}$  female created he them.

And God blessed them, and sayde vnto them: 'Growe, and multiplie, and fyll the earth, and subdue it, g haue domynion ouer the fish of the see, and ouer the foules of the ayre, and ouer all the beastes that crepe vpo the earth.

<sup>c</sup> And God sayde: lo, I have geven you all maner herbes that beare sede vpon the whole earth, and all maner frutefull trees that beare sede, to be meate for you. And to all beastes of the earth, and to all foules vnder the heaven, and to every worme that hath life (vpon earth) all maner grene herbes to eate. And so it came to passe. <sup>4</sup>And God behelde all  $\frac{1}{2}$  he had made, and lo, they were exceedinge good. Then of the evenynge and mornynge was made the sixte day.

The ij. Chapter.

A THUS was heauē and earth fynished with all their hoost, and thus in the seuenth daye God ended his worke, which he had made, "g rested in the seuenth daye from all his workes which he had made: And blessed the seuenth daye, g sanctified it, because  $\frac{1}{2}$  in it he rested from all his workes, which God created and made.

These are the generacions of heauē and earth whan they were created, in the tyme whan the LORDE God made heauen and earth: before there was eny twygg vpon earth, and or euer there grew eny grene herbe vpon the felde. For the LORDE God had yet sent no rayne vpon  $\mathring{y}$  earth, nether was there eny man to tylle the earth. But there arose a myst from the earth,  $\mathring{g}$  watered all the londe. And  $\mathring{f}$  LORDE God shope man euē of the moulde of the earth,  $\mathring{g}$  brethed in to his face § breth of life. I And so was man made a lyuynge soule.

围

The LORDE God also planted a garde of pleasure in Eden, towarde y east, and set man therin whom he had made. And the LORDE God caused to sprynge out of the earth all maner trees, pleasaut to loke  $vp\bar{o}$ , and good to eate : and the tre of life in the myddest of the garden,<sup>s</sup> and the tre of knowlege of good and euell.

And out of Eden there wente a ryuer, to water the garden, and there deuyded it selfe in to foure heade waters. The first is called Phison, which renneth aboute all the londe of Heuyla. "And there is founde golde, ( $\mathfrak{g}$  the golde of that countre is precious,) and there is founde Bedellion, and the precious stone \* Onix. The second water is called Gihon,  $\mathfrak{g}$ Moriās. The thirde water is called Hydeckell, which runneth towarde the east syde of  $\mathfrak{f}$  Assiriās. The fourth water is Euphrates.

And the LORDE God toke man,  $\hat{\mathbf{u}}$  set him in the pleasaunt garden of Eden, to dresse it  $\mathbf{g}$  to kepe it. And the LORDE God commaunded man, sayēge : 'Thou shalt eate of all maner trees in  $\hat{\mathbf{y}}$  garden : But of  $\hat{\mathbf{y}}$  tre of knowlege of good and euell, shalt thou not eate. For loke in what daye so euer thou eatest therof, thou shalt dye the death.

And the LORDE God sayde: It is not good ý mā shulde be alone. I wil make him an helpe,† to beare him cōpany. And whan God the LORDE had made of the earth all maner beastes of the felde, g all maner foules vnder the heauē, he brought them vnto man, to se what he wolde call thē: For as mā called all maner of luinge soules, so are their names. And man gaue names vnto all maner catell, g vnto the foules vnder the heauē, and vnto all maner beastes of ŷ felde. But vnto man there was founde no helpe, to beare him company.

Then the LORDE God caused an herde slepe to fall vpon man, and he slepte. And he toke out one of his rybbes, and (in steade therof) he fylled vp  $\hat{y}$  place with flesh. And the LORDE God made a woman, to  $\hat{y}$  rybbe that he toke out of man, and brought her vnto him. Then sayde man: This is once bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh. She shalbe called woman, because she was take of man. For this cause shal a man leaue father and mother, and cleue vnto his wife, a

Then sayde the woman vnto the serpent: We eate of the frute of the trees in the garden: But as for the frute of the tree that is in the myddes of the garden, God hath sayde: Eate not ye of it, and touch it not, lest ye dye.

Then saide the serpent vnto the woman: \*Tush, ye shall not dye the death. For God doth knowe, that in what daye so euer ye eate of it, youre eyes shalbe opened, and ye shal be as God, and knowe both good and euell. And the woman sawe that  $\frac{1}{2}$  tre was good to eate of, and lustye vnto the eyes, and a pleasaunt tre to make wyse, and toke of the frute of it, and ate, and gaue vnto hir husbande also therof, and he ate. And they herde the voyce of the LORDE God, which walked in the garden in the coole of the daye. And Adam hyd him self with his wyfe, from the presence of y LORDE God amonge the trees of the garden. And  $\psi$ LORDE God called Adam, and sayde vnto him: Where art thou? And he saide: I herde thy voyce in the garden, and was afrayed, because I am naked, and therfore I hyd my self. And he sayde: who tolde the, that thou art naked? Hast thou not eaten of the tre, wherof I commaunded the, v thou shuldest not eate?

Then sayde Adam: The woman which thou gauest me (to beare me company) gaue me of the tre, and I ate. And the LORDE God sayde vnto the woman: wherfore hast thou done this? And vnto the woman he sayde: I will increase thy sorow, whan thou art with childe: with payne shalt thou beare thy childrē, and  $\delta$  thy lust shal pertayne vnto thy huszbande, and he shal rule the.

And vnto Adam he sayde: For so moch as thou hast herkened vnto the voyce of thy wyfe, and hast eaten of the tre, wherof I commaunded the, sayenge: thou shalt not eate of it. Cursed be y earth for thy sake. With sorowe shalt thou eate therof, all the dayes of thy life. Thornes and thistles shalt it beare vnto the, and thou shalt eate the herbes of the felde. In the sweate of thy face shalt thou eate thy bred, tyll thou be turned agayne vnto earth, where thou art takē: 'for earth thou art, and vnto earth shalt thou be turned agayne.

And Adam called his wyfe Heua, because she is the mother of all lyuynge. And the LORDE God made Adam  $\mathfrak{g}$  his wyfe garmentes of skynnes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  those he put on them. And the LORDE God sayde: lo, Adam is become as it were one of vs,  $\mathfrak{g}$  knoweth good  $\mathfrak{g}$  euell. But now lest he stretch his hande, and take also of the tre of life, and eate, and lyue for euer. Then the LORDE God put him out of the garden of Eden, to tyll  $\mathfrak{f}$ earth, whece he was take. And he cast Adam out. And before the garden of Eden he set Cherubes, and a naked fyrie swerde, to kepe  $\mathfrak{f}$  waye vnto the tre of life.

"And the LORDE had respecte vnto Abell and to his offerynge: but vnto Cain and his offerynge he loked not. Then was Cain exceadinge wroth, and his countenaunce chaunged. And the LORDE sayde vnto Cain: Why art thou angrie? and why doth thy countenaunce chaunge? Is it not so? that yf thou do well, thou shalt receaue it: but and yf thou do euell, thy synne lyeth open in the dorc? "Shal he then be subdued vnto the? and wilt thou rule him? And Cain talked with Abell his brother.

And it happened, that whan they were in B the felde, Cain arose agaynst Abell his brother, and slow him. Then sayde the LORDE vnto Cain: Where is Abell thy brother? He suvde : I can not tell. 'Am I my brothers keper? And he sayde: What hast thou done? The voyce of thy brothers bloude crieth vnto me out of the earth. And now shalt thou be cursed upon the earth, which hath opened hir mouth, and receaued thy brothers bloude of thine hande. Whan thou tyllest § grounde, she shall henszforth not geue hir power vnto the. <sup>d</sup>A vagabunde and a rennagate shalt thou be vpon $ earth. And Cain sayde vnto $ LORDE: 'my synne is greater, then that it maye be forgeuen me. Beholde, thou castest me out this daye from out of § londe, and from thy sight must I hyde my self, and must be a vagabunde and a rennagate vpon y earth. And thus shal it go with me: that who so fyndeth me, shal slave me. C

But the LORDE sayde thus vnto him: Who so euer slayeth Cain, it shalbe auenged seuenfolde. And the LORDE put a marck vpon Cain, that no man which founde him, shulde kyll him. So Cain wente out from ŷ face of the LORDE, and dwelt in the lande Nod, vpon the east syde of Eden.

And Cain laye with his wyfe, which conceaued and bare Henoch. And he buylded a cite, and called it after the name of his sonne Henoch. And Henoch begat Irad, Irad begat Mahuiael. Mahuiael begat Mathusael. Mathusael begat Lamech.

And Lamech toke him two wyues: § one was called Ada, g the other Zilla. And Ada hare label, of whom came they that dwelt in tentes and had catell. And his brothers name

And Lamech sayde vnto his wyues Ada' and Zilla: Heare my voyce (ye wyues of Lamech) and herken vnto my wordes: for I haue slayne a man, and wounded my selfe: and (haue kylled) a yonge man, and gottē my self strypes. Cain shalbe auēged seuē tymes: but Lamech seuen and seuentie tymes.

Adam laye yet with his wyfe agayne,  $\mathfrak{g}$  she bare a sonne, and called him Seth. For God (sayde she) hath apoynted me another sede, for Abell, whom Cain slew. And Seth begat a sonne also, and called him Enos. At the same tyme beganne men to call vpon the name of the LORDE.

The b. Chapter.

THIS is the boke of the generacion of  $\mathfrak{A}$ man, in the tyme whan God created man, and made him after the symilitude of God. Male and female made he them, and blessed the,  $\mathfrak{g}$  called their names Man, in the tyme whan they were created. <sup>5</sup> And Adam was an hundreth and thirtie yeare olde, and begat a sonne, which was like his owne ymage, and called his name Seth:  $\mathfrak{g}$  lyued therafter eight hūdreth yeare, and begat sonnes and doughters. And his whole age was nyne hundreth and thirtie yeares, and so he dyed.

Seth was an hundreth and fyue yeare olde, and begat Enos:  $\mathfrak{g}$  lyued therafter eight hundreth and seuen yeare, and begat sonnes and doughters. And his whole age was nyene hūdreth and twolue yeares, and so he dyed.

Enos was nyentie yeare olde, and begat B Kenan: and lyued therafter eight hundreth  $\alpha$ fyftene yeare, and begat sonnes  $\alpha$  daughters. And his whole age was uyene hudreth and fyue yeares, and so he dyed.

Kenan was seuctie yeare olde, and begat Mahalaliel: and lyued therafter eight hundreth and fourtie yeare, and begat sonnes g doughters. And his whole age was nyene hundreth and ten yeares, and so he dyed.

And his whole age was thre hundreth and fyue and thre score yeares. \*And for so moch as he lyued a godly life, God toke him awaye,  $\mathfrak{q}$  he was nomore sene.

Mathusalah was an hūdreth  $\mathfrak{g}$  seuē and foure score yeare olde,  $\mathfrak{g}$  begat Lamech: and lyued therafter seuen hundreth and two and foure score yeare, and begat sonnes  $\mathfrak{g}$ doughters. And his whole age was nyene hundreth and nyene and tre score yeares, and so he dyed.

Lamech was an hundreth and two and foure score yeare olde, and begat a sonne,  $\mathfrak{g}$  called him Noe, and sayde: This same shall coforte vs in oure workes, and in the sorowe of oure hondes vpon the earth, <sup>b</sup> which the LORDE hath cursed. After this he lyued fyue hundreth and fyue  $\mathfrak{g}$  nyentie yeare, and begat sonnes and doughters. And his whole age was seuen hundreth seuen and seuentie yeares, and so he dyed.

Noe was fyue hundreth yeare olde, and begat Sem, Ham and Iaphet.

The bi. Chapter.

A SO whan men beganne to multiplie vpon the earth, and had begot them doughters, the children of God sawe the doughters of men, that they were fayre, and toke vnto thē wyues soch as they liked. Then sayde ŷ LORDE: My sprete shal not allwaye stryue with man, for he is but flesh also. I wil yet geue him respyte an hundreth and twēty yeares. There were giauntes also in the worlde at that tyme. For whan the children of God had lyen with the daughters of men, and begotten them children, ŷ same (children) became mightie in the worlde, and men of renowne.

But whan the LORDE sawe  $\frac{1}{y}$  the wickednes of man was increased vpon  $\frac{1}{y}$  earth, and that all  $\frac{1}{y}$  thought and imaginacion of their hert was but onely euell contynually, "it repented him, that he had made man vpon the earth, and he sorowed in his hert, and sayde: I wyll destroye man kynde which I haue made, from the earth: both man, beest, worme, and foule vnder the heauen: for it repenteth me, that I haue made them. 'Neuertheles Noe founde grace in the sight of the LORDE.

This is  $\hat{y}$  generacion of Noe. Noe was a righteous and parfecte mā, f and led a godly life in his tyme, and begat thre sonnes: Sem, Ham and Iaphet. Notwithstondinge  $\hat{y}$  earth was corrupte in  $\hat{y}$  sight of God, and full of myschefe. Then God loked vpon  $\hat{y}$  earth: and lo, it was corrupte (for all flesh had corrupte his waye vpon the earth.)

Then sayde God vnto Noe: The ende of C all flesh is come before me, for the earth is full of myschefe before them. And lo, I wyll destroye them with the earth. Make the an Arcke of Pyne tre, and make chambers in it, and pitch it within and without with pitch, and make it after this fashion: The length shal be thre hundreth cubites, the bredth fiftie cubites, and the heyght thirtie cubites. A wyndow shalt thou make aboue of a cubyte greate: but the dore shalt thou set in the myddest in the syde of it: And the Arke shalt thou make with thre loftes one aboue another. For lo, I wyll bringe a floude of water vpon the earth, to destroye all flesh (wherin the breth of life is) vnder the heauē: All that is vpon earth, shal perishe.

But with the wyll I make a couenaunt, and thou shalt go in to the Arcke with thy sonnes, with thy wyfe, and with thy sonnes wyues. And of all creatures what so euer flesh it be, thou shalt bringe in to the Arcke, euen a payre: the male and the female, that they maye lyue with the: Of foules after their kynde, of beastes after their kynde, and of all maner wormes of the earth after their kinde. # The rb. Chapter.

T happened after these actes, y the worde a I of § LORDE came vnto Abra in a vysion, and sayde: Feare not Abram, I am thy shylde and thy exceadinge greate rewarde. But Abram sayde: LORDE LORDE, what wilt thou geue me? I go childles, and the seruaunt of my house (this Eleasar of Damascos) hath a sonne. And Abram sayde morouer: Beholde, vnto me hast thou geuen no sede: and lo, the sonne of my housholde shal be myne heyre. And beholde, the worde of the LORDE spake vnto him, and saide: He shal not be thine heyre, but one that shal come out of thine owne body, he shal be thine heyre. And he bad him go forth, and sayde: Loke vp vnto heauen, f and tell  $\psi$ starres: Canst thou nombre them? And he sayde vnto him: \*Euen so shal thy sede be.

Abram beleued the LORDE, and  $\frac{1}{2}$  was B counted vnto him for righteousnes.<sup>s</sup> And he sayde vnto him: I am  $\frac{3}{2}$  LORDE,  $\frac{1}{2}$  brought the from Vr out of Chaldea, to geue  $\frac{3}{2}$  this londe to possesse it. But Abram sayde: LORDE LORDE, Wherby shall I knowe, that I shall possesse it? And he sayde vnto him: Take a cow of thre yeare olde, <sup>h</sup> and a she goate of thre yeare olde, and a ramme of thre yeare olde, and a turtyll doue, and a yonge pigeon. And he toke all these, and deuyded them in the myddes, and layde the one parte ouer agaynst the other, but the foules deuyded he not. And the foules fell vpō the flesh, but Abram droue them awaye.

Chap. rb.

Now whan the Sonne beganne to go downe, there fell an heuy slepe vpō Abram. And lo, feare and greate darcknes fell vpon him. And he sayde vnto Abram: knowe this of a suertye, that "thy sede shalbe a strauger, in a londe that is not theirs. And they shall make bonde men of them, and intreate them euell foure hundreth yeares. But the people whō they shal serue, wyl I iudge. Afterwarde shall they 'go forth with greate substaunce: and thou shalt departe vnto thy fathers in peace, and shalt be buried in a good age.
 And after the fourth generacion they shall come hither agayne, for the wickednes of ÿ

Amorites is not yet full. So whan the Sonne was downe, and it was waxed darcke: Beholde, there smoked a formace, and a fyre brande wente betwene ŷ partes. "The same daye made the LORDE a couenaūt with Abram, and sayde: Vato thy sede wil I geue this lõde, from the water of Egipte, vato the greate water Euphrates: the Kenytes, the Kenzites, the Kydmonites, the Hethites, the Pherezites, the Giauntes, the Amorites, the Cananites, the Gergesites, and the Iebusites.

- ARAI Abrams wife bare him no children: but she had an handmayde an Egipcian, whose name was Agar, and sayde vnto Abram: Beholde, the LORDE hath closed me, that I can not beare. Go in (I praye the) vnto my mayde: peraduenture I shalbe multiplied by her, more then by myself. And Abram herkened vnto the voyce of Sarai. Than Sarai Abrams wife toke Agar hir mayde y Egipcian (after they had dwelt ten yeare in the londe of Canaan) and gaue her vnto hir huszbande Abrā, to be his wife. And he wente in vnto Agar, and she conceaued. Now whan she sawe y she had conceyued, she despysed hir mastresse.
- Then sayde Sarai vnto Abram: I must suffre wronge for thy sake. I layde my mayde by the: but now because she seyth, that she hath conceaued, I must be despysed in hir sight: the LORDE be iudge betwene me und the. And Abram sayde vnto Sarai: Be-Beholde, I haue two doughters, which yet haue knowne no man: them will I brynge out vnto you, do with them as it liketh you. Onely do nothinge vnto these men of God, for therfore are they come vnder the shadowe of my rofe. But they sayde: Come thou hither. Then sayde they: Camest not thou onely herin as a straunger, and wilt thou now be a judge? Wel, we will deale worse with the the with them.

And  $\hat{y}$  men saide vnto Lot: Hast thou yet here eny sonne in lawe, or sonnes or doughters? Who so euer belongeth vnto the in the cite, brynge him out of this place: for we must destroye this place, because the crye of them is greate before the LORDE, which hath sent vs to destroye them. Then wente Lot forth, and spake to his sonnes in lawe, which shulde haue maried his doughters, and sayde: O stonde vp, and get you out of this place, for the LORDE wyll destroye this cite. Neuertheles they toke it but for a sporte.

Now whan the mornynge arose, the angels caused Lot to spede him, and sayde: <sup>d</sup>Stonde vp, take thy wife g thy two doughters which are at hande, that thou also perishe not in the  $\mathfrak{B}$  synne of this cite. But whyle he prolonged the tyme, the men caught him and his wife, and his two doughters by the hande (because the LORDE was mercifull vnto him,) and brought him forth,  $\alpha$  set him without the cite.

And whē they had brought him out, they sayde: Saue thy soule, and loke not behynde the, nether stonde thou in all this countre: Saue thy self vpon the mountayne, that thou

Then sayde Lot vnto thē: Oh no my LORDE, beholde, in as moch as thy seruaut hath founde grace in thy sight, now make thy mercy greate, which thou hast shewed vnto me, in that thou sauest my soule alyue. I can not saue my self vpon the mountayne. There might some mysfortune fall vpon me, that I shulde dye. Beholde, here is a cite by, that I maye flye vnto, and it is a litle one: let me saue myself there in. Is it not a litle one, that my soule maye lyue?

Then sayde he vnto him: Beholde, I haue loked vpon the in this poynte also, that I will not ouerthrowe the cite, wherof thou hast spoken. Haist the, and saue thy self there: for I can do nothinge tyll thou be come thither. Therfore is the cite called Zoar. And the Sonne was vp vpon the earth, whan Lot came in to Zoar.

<sup>c</sup>Then the LORDE caused brymstone and fyre to rayne downe from the LORDE out of heauen vpon Sodoma and Gomorra, and ouerthrew those cities, the whole region, and all that dwelt in the cities, and that that grew vpon the earth. <sup>f</sup> And his wife loked behynde her, and was turned in to a pillar of salt.

Abraham rose vp early in the mornynge, and gat him vnto the place, <sup>s</sup>where he had stonde before the LORDE, and turned his face towarde Sodoma and Gomorra, and all  $\mathring{y}$ londe of that countre, and loked. And beholde, there rose vp a smoke from  $\mathring{y}$  countre, as it had bene  $\mathring{y}$  smoke of a fornace. For whan God destroyed  $\mathring{y}$  cities of the region, he thought vpon Abraham, and conueyed Lot out of the cities which he ouerthrew, wherin Lot dwelt.

And Lot departed out of Zoar, and dwelt in the mountaynes with both his daughters (for he was afrayed to tary at Zoar) and so remayned he in a caue with both his daughters.

Then sayde  $\hat{y}$  elder vnto the yonger: Oure father is olde, and there is not a man more vpon earth, that can come in vnto vs after the maner of all the worlde. Come therfore, let vs geue oure father wyne to drynke, and lye with him, that we maye saue sede of oure father. So they gaue their father wyne to drynke that same night. And the elder doughter wente in, \* and laye with hir father :

and he perceaued it not, nether when she laye downe, ner when she rose vp.

On the morow the elder sayde vnto the yonger: Beholde, yesternight laye I with my father: let vs geue him wyne to drynke this night also: that thou mayest go in and lye with him, that we maye saue sede of oure father. So they gaue their father wyne to drynke that night also: And the yonger arose like wyse, and laye with him: g he perceaued it not, nether when she laye downe, ner when she rose vp.

Thus were both the doughters of Lot with childe by their father. And the elder bare a sonne, and called him Moab, of whom come  $\ddot{y}$  Moabytes vnto this daye. And  $\ddot{y}$  yonger bare a sonne also, and called him the sonne Annui, of whom come the children of Ammon vnto this daye.

The pr. Chapter.

S for Abraham, he departed thence, in to the south countre, and dwelt betwixte Cades and Sur, and was a straunger at Gerar, and sayde of Sara his wife: "She is my sister. Then Abimelech the kinge of Gerar sent for her, and caused her be fett awaye.

But God came to Abimelech by night in a dreame, g sayde vnto him: Beholde, thou art but a deed man, for the womans sake which thou hast taken, for she is a mans wife. Neuertheles Abimelech had not yet touched her, and sayde: LORDE, wilt thou sley a righteous people? Sayde not he vnto me: she is my sister? Yee and sayde not she her self also: he is my brother? With a pure hert g with innocent handes haue I done this.

And God sayde vnto him in a dreame: I knowe that thou dyddest it with a pure hert, and therfore I kepte the, that thou shuldest not synne agaynst me, nether haue I suffred the to touch her. Now therfore delyuer the man his wife ageyne, for he is a prophet: and let him pray for ŷ, and thou shalt lyue. But and yf thou delyuer her not ageyne, be sure, that thou shalt dye the death, and all that is thine.

Then Abimelech rose vp by tymes in the mornynge, and called all his seruauntes, and tolde all these thinges in their eares, and the men were sore afrayed, and Abimelech called Thou hast not dealt with vs, as a man shulde deale. And Abimelech saide morouer vnto Abraham: What sawest thou, ŷ thou hast done this thinge?

Abraham sayde: I thought: Peraduenture there is no feare of God in this place,  $\mathfrak{g}$  they shall sleye me for my wifes sake, And of a trueth she is my sister, for she is my fathers doughter, but not my mothers doughter, and is become my wife. So whan God charged me to wadre out of my fathers house, I sayde vnto her: Shew this kyndnes vpon me, that, where so euer we come, thou saye of me, <sup>b</sup> that I am thy brother.

Then toke Abimelech shepe and oxen, B seruauntes and maydens, and gaue them vnto Abraham, and delyuered him Sara his wife agayne, and sayde: Beholde, my londe stondeth open before the, dwell where it liketh the. And vnto Sara he sayde: Beholde, I haue geuen thy brother a thousande syluer pens: lo, he shalbe vnto the a couerynge of the eyes, for all that are with the, and euery where, and a sure excuse.

As for Abraham, he prayed vnto God: Then God healed Abimelech, and his wyfe, and his maydens, so that they bare childrē. For afore the LORDE had closed all the matrices of Abimelechs house, because of Sara Abrahams wife.

The pri. Chapter.

THE LORDE also vysited Sara, acordinge *as he had promysed: g dealt with her, euen as he had sayde. 'And Sara was with childc, and bare Abraham a sonne in his olde age, euen in the tyme appoynted, like as God had spoken vnto him afore. #### The mini, Chapter.

BRAHAM was olde and well stricken in age, and the LORDE had blessed him in all thinges. And he sayde vnto his eldest seruaunt of his house, which had the rule of all his goodes: "Laye thine hade vnder my thye, that I may make the sweare by y LORDE the God of heaven and earth, that thou 'take no wife vnto my sonne amonge ÿ doughters of y Cananites, (amonge whom I dwell) but that thou go in to my countre, and * to myne owne kynred, and brynge my sonne Isaac a wife.

The seruaunt sayde: What and the woman wyl not folowe me in to this countre? shal I then cary thy sonne agayne in to yonder londe, where thou camest out of? Abraham sayde vnto him: Beware of that, that thou brynge not my sonne thither agayne. The LORDE, the God of heauen, which toke me fro my fathers house and from the londe of my kynred, and that talked with me, and sware also vnto me, and sayde: 'Vnto thy sede wyll I geue this londe: Euen he shall sende his angell before the, that thou maiest brynge my sonne a wife from thence. But yf the woman wyll not folowe the, thou art discharged of this ooth: onely brynge not my eruaunt toke ten Camels of the 33 his master and departed, and had all maner of goodes of his master, n vp, and departed vnto Mesopoe cite of Nahor. Then let he the downe without before the cite ll of water in the euenynge, aboute the tyme that the wemen vsed to go forth, and to drawe water. And he sayde:

O LORDE, thou God of my master Abraham, mete me to daye, and shew mercy vnto my master Abraham. Lo, I stonde here besyde the well of water, a the mens doughters of this cite wyll come forth to drawe water: Now yf there come a damsell, to whom I save: bowe downe thy pytcher, a let me drynke, and yf she saye: drynke, and I wyll geue thy Camels drynke also: That y same be she, whom thou hast prouyded for thy seruaunt Isaac: T that I maye knowe by y same that thou hast shewed mercy vpon my master.

And or euer he had left of speakynge, beholde, Rebecca the doughter of Bethuel (which was the sonne of Milca, that was the wyfe of Nahor Abrahams brother) came forth, and bare a pytcher vpon hir shulder, and she was a very fayre damsell of face, and yet a virgin, and vnknowne of eny man: She wente downe to the well, and fylled hir pitcher, and came vp agayne. Then ranne the seruaunt to mete her, and sayde: Let me drynke a litle water out of thy pitcher. And she sayde: drynke syr.

And haistely let she downe the pitcher in  $| \mathfrak{C} |$ hir hande, and gaue him drynke. And whan she had geuen him drynke, she sayde: I wyll drawe for thy Camels also, tyll they haue dronke ynough. vs in thy fathers house to lodge in? She sayde vnto him: I am the doughter of Bethuel, the sonne of Mylca, "whom she bare vnto Nahor. And sayde morouer vnto him: We haue plentye of litter and prouender, and rowme ynough to lodge in.

Then the man bowed himself, and thanked the LORDE, and sayde: Praysed be the LORDE the God of my master Abraham, which hath not withdrawen his mercy and his trueth fro my master, for the LORDE hath brought me the waye to my masters brothers house. And the damsell ranne and tolde all this in hir mothers house. And Rebecca had a brother called Laban.

And Laban ranne to the man without by the well syde: and that came by the reason that he sawe the earynges, and the bracelettes vpon his sisters handes, and herde the wordes of Rehecca his syster, that she sayde: thus spake the man vnto me.

And whan he came to the man, beholde, he stode by the Camels at the well syde. And he sayde: Come in \* thou blessed of the LORDE, wherfore stondest thou without? I haue dressed the house, and made rowme for  $\mathfrak{f}$  Camels. So he brought the man in to  $\mathfrak{f}$ house, and vnbridled the Camels, and gaue them litter and prouender, and water to wash his fete, and the mens that were with him, and set meate before him.

Neuertheles he sayde: I wil not eate, tyll I haue fyrst tolde myne earāde.<sup>6</sup> They answered: Tell on. He sayde: I am Abrahams seruaunt, and the LORDE hath prospered my master richely, so  $\dot{y}$  he is become greate: and he hath geuen him shepe and  $ox\bar{c}$ , syluer and golde, seruauntes and maidens, Camels and Asses: yee and 'Sara my masters wife hath borne my master a sonne in hir olde age: vnto him hath he geuen all that he hath.

And my master hath taken an ooth of me and saide: Thou shalt not take a wife for my sonne amonge the doughters of the Cananites, in whose lande I dwell, but go thy waye to my fathers house and to myne owne kynred, and there take a wyfe for my sonne. But I sayde vnto my master: What and the woman wyl not folowe me? Then sayde he vnto me: The LORDE (before whom I walke) shall sende his angell with the, and prospere thy iourney, that thou mayest take a wife for my sonne of myne owne kynred, and of my fathers house. And so whan thou commest to my kynred, yf they geue her not vnto  $\hat{y}$ , thou shalt be discharged of myne oothe.

So I came this daye vnto the well of water, and sayde: O LORDE thou God of my master Abraham, Yf thou hast prospered my iourney that I go: Beholde, I stonde here by the well of water: Now yf there come forth a virgin to draw water, and I saye vnto her: geue me a litle water to drinke out of thy pitcher, and she saye vnto me: Drynke thou, and I wyll drawe water for thy Camels also: that the same be the womā, which the LORDE hath prouyded for my masters sonne. Now or euer I had spoken out these wordes in my hert, beholde, Rebecca commeth forth with a pitcher vpon hir shulder, and goeth downe to the well, and draweth.

Then sayde I: geue me a drynke. And immediatly she toke downe the pitcher frö hir shulder, and sayde: drynke, and I wyll geue thy Camels drynke also. So I dranke, and she gaue the Camels also to drynke. And I axed her, and sayde: Doughter, whose art thou? She answered: I am $ doughter of Bethuel the sonne of Nahor, whom Milca bare vnto him. Then layed I the caringe vpon hir face, and the bracelettes vpon hir handes, and bowed myself, and thanked the LORDE, and praysed the God of my master Abraham, which had brought me $ right waye, to take my masters brothers doughter vnto his sonne.

Yf ye be they then that shew mercy and faithfulnes vnto my master, tell me: Yf not, yet tell me, that I maye turne me to y right hande or to the left.

Then answered Laban and Bethuel, and sayde: This is come of the LORDE, therfore can we saye nothinge agaynst the, nether euell ner good. There is Rebecca before the, take her, and go thy waye, that she maye be thy masters sonnes wife, as the LORDE hath sayde. When Abrahams scruaunt herde these wordes, he bowed him self vnto the LORDE flat vpon the earth, and toke forth lewels of syluer and golde, and rayment, and gaue them vnto Rebecca. But vnto hir brethren and the mother, he gaue spyces. Then he ate and dronke, and the men also that were with him, and taried there all night.

The rrb. Chapter.

BRAHAM toke another wife called Ketura, which bare him Simram g Iaksan, Medan g Midian, Ieszbak and Suah. Iaksan begat Seba and Dedan. The children of Dedan were Assurim, Latusim, and Leumim. The children of Midian were Epha, Epher, Hanoch, Abida and Eldaa. All these are the children of Ketura. And Abraham gaue all his goodes vnto Isaac: As for the children that he had of the concubynes, he gaue them giftes, and (whyle he yet lyued) he sent the awaye from his sonne Isaac, eastwarde in to the east countre.

This is the age of Abraham which he lyued: euen an hundreth and fyue and seuentye yeare, and fell sicke and dyed in a good age, whan he was olde, <sup>b</sup>t had lyued ynough and was gathered vnto his people. And his sonnes Isaac and Ismael buried him in the dubble caue in the felde of Ephron the sonne of Zoar the Hethite, which lyeth ouer before Mamre, 'in the felde that Abraham bought of the Hethites. There was Abraham buried with Sara his wife. And after the death of Abraham God blessed his sonne Isaac. And he dwelt by the well of the lyuynge and seynge.

Now whan he had bene there a longe season, Abimelech the kynge of the Phylistynes loked out at a wyndow, and sawe Isaac sportinge with Rebecca his wife.

Then Abimelech called Isaac, and sayde: 3 Beholde, she is thy wyfe, why saydest thou then: She is my sister? Isaac answered him: I thought, I might peraduenture haue died because of her. Abimelech saide: Why hast thou then done this vnto vs? It coude lightly haue come to passe, that some of the people might haue lyen with thy wyfe, and so haddest thou broughte synne vpō vs. Thē Abimelech commaunded all the people, and sayde : Who so toucheth this man or his wyfe, shal dye the death.

And Isaac sowed in that londe, and foude the same yeare an hundreth buszshels, for the LORDE blessed him. And he became a greate man, wente forth, and grew, tyll he was exceadinge greate, so that he had moch good in shepe and greate catell, and a greate housholde. WHAN Esau was fourtye yeare olde, he toke wyues: Iudith the doughter of Beri the Hethite, and Basmath the doughter of Elon the Hethite: both these were dishobedient vnto the sprete of Isaac and Rebecca.

And it came to passe when Isaac was olde, his eyes waxed dymme of sight, and he called Esau his greater sonne, and sayde vnto him: My sonne. He answered him : Here am I. And he sayde: Beholde, I am olde, and knowe not whan I shal dye. Now therfore take thy geer, thy quyuer and thy bowe, and get the forth to the felde, and take me some venyson, and make me meate (soch as I loue) and brynge it me herein, that I may eate, y my soule maye blesse the, before I dye.

But Rebecca herde these wordes, that Isaac sayde vnto his sonne. And Esau wente his waye in to the felde, to hunte venyson, and to brynge it home. Then savde Rebecca vnto Iacob hir sonne: beholde, I haue herde thy father talkinge with Esau thy brother, and sayenge: Brynge me venyson, 38 and make me meate, that I maye eate, and blesse the before y LORDE, yer I dye. Now therfore my sonne, heare my voyce, what I commaunde the: Go thy waye to the flocke, and fetch me two good kyddes, that I maye make meate of them for thy father, soch as he loueth: this shalt thou brynge in vnto thy father, that he maye eate, that he maye blesse the before his death.

Neuertheles Iacob sayde vnto Rebecca his mother : Beholde, my brother Esau is rough, and I am smooth: then might my father peraduenture fele me, and I shulde seme vnto him as though I begyled him, and so brynge a curse vpon me and not a blessynge. Then sayde his mother vnto him: That curse be vpon me my sonne, folowe thou my voyce: go thy waye and fetch it me. So he wente his waye, and fetched it, and brought it vnto his mother.

Then his mother made meate, acordinge C as his father loued, and toke Esaus hir elder sonnes costly rayment (which she had with her in y house) and put them vpon Iacob hir yonger sonne. But the kyddes skynnes put she aboute his handes, and where he was smooth aboute the neck: and so she put the meate with bred (as she had made it) in hir sonne Iacobs hande.

And he brought it in vnto his father, and sayde: My father. He answered: here am I, who art thou my sonne? Iacob sayde: I am Esau thy firstborne sonne, I haue done as thou saydest vnto me : aryse, syt vp, and eate of my venyson, that thy soule maye blesse me. But Isaac sayde vnto his sonne: My sonne, how hast thou founde it so soone? He answered: The LORDE thy God brought it to my hande.

The sayde Isaac vnto Iacob: Come neare my sonne, that I maye fele the, whether thou be my sonne Esau or not. So Iacob wete

And he sayde vnto him: art thou my sonne Esau? He answered: Yee I am. Then sayde he: Bringe me here then to eate of thy venyson my sonne,* that my soule maye blesse the. Then he brought it him, and he ate: and he brought him wyne also, and he dranke. And Isaac his father sayde vnto him: Come nye, and kysse me my sonne. So he came nye, and he kyssed him.

Now wyll my huszbande dwell with me agayne, for I haue borne him sixe sonnes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  she called him Zabulon. After that she bare a doughter, whom she called \* Dina.

 Neuertheles God thought vpō Rachel, and herde her, and made her frutefull. Then she conceaued, and bare a sonne, and sayde: God hath taken awaye my rebuke, and she called him Ioseph," and sayde: God geue me yet another sonne.

Now whan Rachel had borne Ioseph, Iacob sayde vnto Laban : 'Let me go, g departe in to my place and vnto myne owne lande: geue me my wyues and my children, (for the which I haue serued the) y I maye go: for thou knowest, what seruyce I have done the. Laban sayde vnto him: Can I not fynde fauoure in thy sight? I perceaue, that God 'hath blessed me for thy sake. Appoynte thou the rewarde,  $\bigvee$  I shal geue the. But he saide vnto him: Thou knowest how I haue serued the, and what maner of catell thou hast vnder me. Thou haddest but litle afore I came hither, but now is it growne in to a multitude, and the LORDE hath blessed § E for my sake. And now whan shall I loke to myne owne house also? He saide: What shal I then geue the?

Iacob sayde: Thou shalt geue me nothinge at all, but yf thou wilt do this for me  $\dot{y}$  I saye, then wyll I fede and kepe thy shepe agayne. I wyll go thorow all thy flockes to daye, and separate thou from amonge them all the shepe that be spotted and partye coloured, and all blacke shepe amonge the lambes. Now loke what shalbe partie coloured and spotted amonge the kyddes, the same shal be my rewarde: so shal my righteousnes testifie with me to daye or tomorow, whan it cometh vnto my rewarde before the, so that, what so euer is not spotted and partye coloured amonge the kyddes, and blacke amonge the lambes, let that be theft with me.

Then sayde Laban: Beholde, let it be so as thou hast sayde. And that same daye he sundered out the speckled and partye coloured goates, and all the spotted and partye coloured kyddes (where there was eny whyte vpon them) and all that was black amonge the lambes, and put them vnder the hande of his children, and made rowme of thre dayes iourney wyde betwixte him and Iacob. So Iacob kepte the residue of Labans flocke.

But Iacob toke staues of grene wyllies, hasell and of chestnottrees, and pylled whyte strekes in them, and layed the staues that he had pylled, in the drynkinge troughes before the flocke, which came there to drynke, that they shulde conceaue, whan they came to drynke. So the flockes conceaued ouer y staues, and brought forth speckelde, spotted and partye coloured.

Then Iacob parted y lambes, and put them 6 to the flocke vnto the spotted: and all that was blacke in Labans flocke, that put he vnto the spotted. And he made him a flocke of his owne, which he put not vnto Labans flocke. Neuertheles in the first buckynge tyme of the flockes, he layed the staues in the drynkinge troughes before the eyes of the flockes, that they shulde conceaue ouer the staues. But in the latter buckynge tyme he layed them not in. So the later were Labans, but the firstlinges were lacobs. Thus the man became exceadinge riche, so that he had many shepe, maydens g seruauntes, Camels and Asses.

suffred him, to do me harme. Yf he sayde: The partye coloured shalbe thy rewarde, then the whole flocke bare partye coloured. Yf he sayde: The speckelde shalbe thy rewarde, the whole flocke bare speckelde. Thus hath God withdrawen youre fathers goodes from him, and geuen them vnto me. For whan the buckynge tyme came, I lift vp myne eyes and sawe in a dreame, and beholde, the rammes leapte vpon the flocke that was speckelde, spotted, a partye coloured.

And the angel of God sayde vnto me in a dreame: Iacob. And I answered: here am I. He sayde: lift vp thine eyes, and beholde, the rammes leape vpon the speckelde, spotted, and partie coloured flocke: for I have sene all  $\hat{y}$  Laban doth vnto the. I am  $\hat{y}$  find at \* Bethel, where thou dyddest anoynte the stone, g maydest a vowe there vnto me. Cost the vp now, g departe out of this londe, z go agayne in to the londe of thy kynred.

C Then answered Rachel and Lea, and sayde voto him: As for vs, we have no porcion ner inheritatice more in oure fathers house,  $\mathfrak{g}$  he hath could vs as straugers, for he hath solde vs,  $\mathfrak{g}$  spent vp oure wages. Therfore hath God withdrawe oure fathers riches from him vnto vs  $\mathfrak{g}$  oure children. What so euer now God hath sayde vnto the, that do.

So Iacob gat vp, and set his children and wyues vpon Camels, and caried awaye all his catell and all his substaunce, that he had gotten at Mesopotamia,  $\dot{y}$  he might come vnto Isaac his father in the lande of Canaan. Labā was gone to clyppe his flocke, "and Kachel stale hir fathers + ymages. Thus dyd Iacob steale awaie  $\ddot{y}$  hert of Laban  $\ddot{y}$  Syrian, in  $\dot{y}$ he tolde him not that he fled. So he fled, g all that was his, gat vp, and passed ouer the water, g wente straight towarde the mount Gilead.

Vpon the thirde daye it was tolde Laban, that Iacob fied. And he toke his brethrē vnto him, and folowed after him seuen dayes iourney, and ouertoke him vpon the mount Gilead. But God came vnto Laban the Syrian in a dreame by night, g sayde vnto him: Bewarre, that thou speake nothinge to Iacob but good. And Labā drew nye vnto Iacob. As for Iacob, he had pytched his tente vpon the mount. And Laban with his brethrē pytched his tent also vpon the same mount Gilead.

Then sayde Laban vnto Iacob: What hast thou done, that thou hast stollen awaie my hert, and caried awaye my doughters, as though they had bene taken captyue with y swerde? Wherfore keptest thou that secrete, that thou woldest flye, and hast stollen awaye fro me, and toldest me not, that I might have brought the on the waye with myrth, with synginge, with tabrettes and harpes? and hast not suffred me to kysse my children and doughters? Thou hast done foolishly, and so moch might I haue made, that I coude haue done you euell: but youre fathers God saide yesterdaye vnto me: Bewarre, that thou speake nothinge vnto Iacob but good. And for so moch then as thou woldest nedes departe, and longedest sore after thy fathers house, why hast thou stollen away my goddes?

Iacob answered and sayde vnto Laban: I H was afrayed, that thou shuldest haue taken away thy doughters frome: but loke by whom thou fyndest thy goddes, let the same dye here before oure brethren. Seke that thine is by me, and take it awaye. (But he knew not, that Rachel had stollen them.) Then wente Laban in to Iacobs tent and in to Leas tent, and in to both the maydeus tetes, and founde nothinge: and out of Leas tente he wente in to Rachels tent. Then toke Rachel the ymages, and layed them vnder the Camels strawe, and sat downe vpon them. But Laban searched the whole tent, and founde nothinge. Then sayde she vnto hir father: Be not angrie my lorde, that I can not ryse vp vnto the: for it goeth with me after the maner of So he sought, and founde not the wemen. ymages.

And Iacob was wroth, and chode with Laban, answered  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde vnto him: What haue I trespased or offended,  $\mathfrak{f}$  thou art so whote vpon me? Thou hast searched all my housholde stuff,  $\mathfrak{g}$  what hast thou founde of thy housholde stuff? Laye it here before my brethren  $\mathfrak{g}$  thyne,  $\mathfrak{f}$  they maye iudge betwene vs both. Twentye yeare haue I bene with the: thy shepe  $\mathfrak{g}$  goates haue not bene vnfrutefull, the rammes of thy flocke haue I not eaten: Loke what was  $\mathfrak{f}$  torne of beastes, I brought it not vnto  $\mathfrak{f}$ , I was fayne to paie it my self: thou requyredest it of my hande, whether it were stollen fro me by daye or by night. JF Thus have I served twentye years in thy house, fourtene years for thy doughters, g sixe for thy flocke, and ten tymes hast thou chaunged my rewarde: g yf the God of my father the God of Abraham, and the feare of Isaac had not bene on my syde, thou haddest latten me go awaye emptye. But God hath loked vpon myne aduersite and laboure, and rebuked the yesterdaye.

Laban answered and sayde: The doughters are my doughters,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the children are my childrē, and the flockes are my flockes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  all that thou seist is myne. What can I do this daye vnto these my doughters, or to their children whom they haue borne? Now therfore come on, let vs make a couenaunt (I  $\mathfrak{g}$ thou) which maye be a wytnesse betwene me and the. Then toke Iacob a stone,  $\mathfrak{g}$  set it vp (for a piler or markstone) and sayde vnto his brethren : Gather stones. And they toke the stones, and made an heape,  $\mathfrak{g}$  ate vpon the same heape. And Labā called it Iegar Sahadutha, but Iacob called it Gilead : (either of them after the properte of his language.)

Then sayde Laban: * This heape be wytø nesse betwene me and the this daye (therfore is it called Gilead) and a testimony, for he sayde: The LORDE loke betwene me and yf whan we are departed y one from y other: y, thou vexe my doughters, or take other wyues vnto them. There is no ma with vs, but lo, God is the wytnesse betwene me and the. And Laban sayde morouer vnto Iacob: Beholde, this is the heape, and this is the marckstone that I haue set vp betwixte me and the : the same heape be wytnesse, and the same marckstone also be wytnesse, yf I passe ouer vnto the, or yf thou passe ouer this heape g marckstone vnto me, to do eny harme. The God of Abraham, and the God of Nahor, and the God of their fathers, be judge betwene vs.

And Iacob sware vnto him by the feare of his father Isaac. And Iacob offred an offerynge vpon the mount, and called his brethrē to eate bred. And whan they had eaten, they taried vpon the mount all night. But vpon the morow Laban rose vp early, kyssed his childrē g doughters, g blessed thē, g departed, and came agayne vnto his place. As for Iacob, he wente on his iourney, g the angels of God met him. And whan he sawe them, he sayde: It is Gods hoost,  $\mathfrak{c}$  called the same place Mahanaim.

The rrrij. Chapter.

ACOB sent messaungers before him to his brother Esau †in to the lande of Seir, of the felde of Edom, g commaunded thē, g sayde: Saye thus vnto my lorde Esau: Thy seruaunt Iacob sendeth § this worde: I haue bene out with Laban, g haue bene hither to amonge straungers, g haue oxen g Asses, shepe, seruauntes g maydēs, and haue sent forth to shewe it the my lorde, § I might fynde fauoure in thy sight.

The messaungers came agayne vnto Iacob, and sayde: We came vnto thy brother Esau,  $\mathfrak{g}$  he commeth forth also agaynst the with foure hundreth men. Thē hated they him  $\mathfrak{P}$  more, for he sayde: Heare I praye you what I dreamed. Me thought we were byndinge sheeues vpō  $\mathfrak{P}$  felde,  $\mathfrak{q}$  my shefe arose, and stode vp, and youre sheeues rounde aboute made obeysaunce vnto my shefe.

Then sayde his brethre vnto him: Shalt 玛 thou be oure kinge, and haue domynio ouer vs? And they hated him yet y more, because of his dreame, t his wordes. And he had yet another dreame, which he tolde his brethre,  $\pi$  saide: Beholde, I had yet another dreame : Me thought y Sonne g y Moone g eleven starres made obeisauce to me. And what this was tolde his father and his brethre, his father reproued him, g sayde vnto him: What maner of dreame is this, y thou hast dreamed? Shall I a thy mother, a thy brethren come a fall before y vpon the groude? And his brethre had envie at him. But his father marcked this sayinge.

■ Now whā his brethren were gone forth to kepe their fathers catell in Sichē, Israel sayde vnto Ioseph: Do not thy brethren kepe the catell in Sichem? Come, I wil sende the vnto thē. He answered: 'Here am I. And he sayde: Go thy waye, and loke whether it be well with thy brethren and with ŷ catell, and brynge me worde agayne how it is. And he sent him out of the valley of Hebron, to go vnto Sichem.

Then a certayne man founde him, wandringe out of his waye in the felde, which axed him, and sayde: Whom sekest thou? He answered: I seke my brethren: tell me I pray the where they kepe. The man sayde: They are gone from hence, for I herde them saye : let vs go vnto Dothan. Then folowed Ioseph after his brethren, and founde them at Dothan.

Now whan they sawe him a farre of, afore he came at the, they deuysed to sleve him, and sayde one to another: Lo, there cometh the dreamer,  $\ddagger$  come on, and let vs slev him,  $\tau$  cast him in a pytt, and saye: a wicked beast bath deuoured him: the shal it be sene, what his dreames are.

And the chefe marshall put Ioseph vnto them,  $\hat{y}$  he might serue them. And so they were in preson for a season.

And they dreamed, both the butlar q the baker in one night, euery mā his owne dreame, and euery dreame had his interpretacio. Now in the mornynge whan Ioseph came in vnto them, and sawe that they loked sadly, he axed them and sayde: Why loke ye so sadly to daye? They answered: We haue dreamed, and haue no man to declare it vnto vs. Ioseph sayde: Interpretinge belongeth vnto God, but tell it me yet.

Then the chefe butlar tolde Ioseph his 33 dreame, and saide vnto him: I dreamed that there was a vyne before me, which had thre braunches, and it budded, grewe and bare blossoms, and the grapes therof were rype. And I had Pharaos cuppe in my hande,  $\sigma$  toke (the grapes) and wronge th $\bar{c}$  in to  $\hat{y}$  cuppe, and gaue Pharao the cuppe in his hade.

Ioseph sayde: This is the interpretacio: The thre braunches are thre dayes, and ouer thre dayes shall Pharao take the, and putt the in thine office agayne, that thou mayest geue him the cuppe in his hande after the olde maner, wha thou wast his butlar. But whan thou art in thy prosperite, thynke vpon me, and shewe me kyndnesse, that thou mayest certifie Pharao of me, y he maie bringe me out of this house: for I was preuely caried out of the lande of the Hebrues, and here also haue I done nothinge, that they shulde haue put me in this dongeon.

 ${f C}$  Whan the chefe baker sawe, that the interpretacion was good, he sayde vnto Ioseph: I dreamed, that I bare thre wyker baskettes vpon my heade, and in $ vppermost baszket all maner of bakē meates vnto Pharao, and the foules ate out of the baszket vpon my heade.

Ioseph answered, and sayde: This is the interpretacion: The thre baszkettes are thre dayes, and after thre dayes shall Pharao take the, and hange the vpon the galowe, and the foules shal eate thy flesh from of §.

And vpon the thirde daye it came to passe, that Pharao helde his * byrth daye, and made a feast vnto all his seruauntes, and toke the chefe butlar and the chefe baker before all his seruauntes, and restored the chefe butlar to his butlarshipe agayne, so that he reached the cuppe in to Pharaos hande. As for the chefe baker, he caused him be hanged like as loseph had interpretated vnto him. Neuerthelesse the chefe butlar thought not on Ioseph, but forgat him.

The rli. Chapter.

ND after two yeares Pharao had a dreame, how that he stode by a water syde: and beholde, out of the water there came seuen goodly kyne, and fatfleshed, and wente fedinge in the medowe. After these he sawe other seuen kyne come out of the water, which were euell fauoured and leane fleshed, and wente by the kyne vpon ŷ water syde: and the euell fauoured leene kyne ate vp the seuen goodly and fatt kyne. Then Pharao awaked.

And he slepte agayne, and dreamed the seconde tyme. And he sawe that seuen eares of corne grewe vpon one stalke, full and good. Afterwarde he sawe seuē thynne and blasted eares come vp, and the seuen thynne eares deuoured the seuen greate and full eares. Then Pharao awaked, and sawe that it was a dreame. And whan it was daye, his sprete was troubled, and he sente out,  $\mathfrak{q}$  caused to call all the soythsayers in Egipte g all the wyse men, and tolde them his dreame. But there was none, that coude tell Pharao the interpretacion of it.

Then spake the chefe butlar vnto Pharao, and saide: This daye do I remembre my fawte. Whan Pharao was angrie with his seruauntes, and put me in preson with  $\hat{y}$  chefe baker in  $\hat{y}$  chefe marshals house, we dreamed both in one night euery mā his dreame, hauinge his owne interpretacion. Then was there with vs a yonge man an Hebrue, the chefe marshals seruaunt, vnto whom we tolde it, and he declared oure dreames vnto vs, vnto euery mā acordinge to his dreame. And as he declared it vnto vs, so came it to passe. For I was restored vnto myne office, and he was hanged.

Then Pharao sent and called for Ioseph and they let him out of the dongeon. And he let himself be shauen, and chaunged his clothes, and came in vnto Pharao. Then saide Pharao vnto him: I haue dreamed a dreame, and there is no man that can interprete it: but I haue herde tell of the, that whā thou hearest a dreame, thou declarest it. Ioseph answered Pharao, and sayde: God shall geue Pharao a prosperous answere, yee well without me.

Pharao sayde vnto Ioseph: I dreamed that  $\mathbb{C}$ I stode by a water syde, and beholde, out of the water there came seuen kyne, fatfleshed and goodly, and wente fedinge in  $\mathring{y}$  medowe. And after them I sawe other seuē kyne come out, thynne, euell fauoured, and leenfleshed. So euell fauoured sawe I neuer in all the lande of Egipte. And the seuen leene and euell fauoured kyne, ate vp the seuen first fat kyne. And whan they had eatē them vp, a man coude not perceaue that they had eaten them,  $\mathfrak{g}$  were as euell fauoured as they were afore. Then I awaked.

And I sawe agayne in my dreame seuen eares of corne, growinge vpō one stalke, full and good. Afterwarde there spronge vp seuen wythred eares, thynne and blasted, and the seuen thynne eares deuoured the seuen good eares. And I haue shewed it vnto my soithsayers, but they can tell me nothinge therof.

Ioseph answered Pharao: Both Pharaos B dreames are one. God sheweth Pharao what he wil do. The seuen good kyne are seuen yeares, and the seuen good eares are seuen yearcs also. It is one dreame. The seuen leene and euell fauoured kyne, that came vp after them, are seuen yeares. And the seuen thynne and blasted eares, shalbe seuen yeares of derth. This is now the thinge which I tolde Pharao, that God sheweth Pharao, what he wyll do.

Beholde, there shal come seuen yeares with greate plenteousnes in  $\frac{1}{2}$  whole lande of Egipte, and after the same there shall come seuen yeares of derth, so that all this plenteousnes shalbe forgotten in  $\frac{1}{2}$  lande of Egipte: and the derth shall consume the lande, so that the plenteousnes shal not be perceaued in the lande, because of the derth that commeth therafter, for it shall be very greate. Where as Pharao dreamed the seconde tyme, it significant that this thinge is surely prepared of God, and that God wil shortly brynge the same to passe.

Let Pharao now prouyde for a man of vnderstondinge a wyszdome, whom he maye set ouer the lande of Egipte, and se that he ordene officers in the londe, and take $ fifth (parte) of the lande of Egipte in the seuen plenteous yeares, and gather all y foode y shal come of the plenteous yeares, that they maye laye vp corne vnder Pharaos power for sustenaunce in the cities, and kepe it, y there maye be foode founde prepared for the lande in the seuen deare yeares, which shall come vpon the lande of Egipte, that the lande be not destroyed of honger. The sayenge pleased Pharao well and all his seruautes. And Pharao sayde vnto his seruauntes: How might we fynde soch a man, in whom is the sprete of God? And sayde vnto Iosep: For so moch as God hath shewed y all this, there is none of soch vnderstondinge g wyszdome as thou.

Thou shalt be ouer my house, and acordinge vnto thy worde shall all my people obeye: onely in the kynges seate wyll I be more then thou. And he sayde: Beholde, I haue set the ouer the whole lande of Egipte. And he toke of his ringe from his hāde, and gaue it loseph in his hāde, and clothed him with whyte sylke, and honge a cheyne of golde aboute his neck, and made him ryde vpō the seconde charet: and caused it be proclamed before him, that men shulde bowe their knees

And Pharao sayde vnto Ioseph: I am Pharao: without thy wyll shall no man moue his hande or his fote in all the lāde Egipte. And he called him * Zaphnath Paena, g gaue him a wife, euen Asnath the doughter of Potiphar the prest of On. So Ioseph wente out, for to vyset the lande of Egipte. (And he was thirtie yeare olde, whan he stode before Pharao.) And he departed from Pharao, and wente thorow all the lande of Egipte.

And the londe dyd so those seuen plenteous yeares, and they gathered all the foode of the seuen yeares that were in the lande of Egipte,  $\mathfrak{g}$  layed it in the cities. Loke what foode grewe in the felde rounde aboute euery cite, they put it therin. So Ioseph layed vp the corne in stoare, and that moch aboue measure, as the sonde of the see : in so moch  $\mathfrak{f}$  he left of nombrynge of it, for it coude not be nombred.

<sup>6</sup> And vnto Ioseph there were borne two sonnes (before § derth came) whom Asnath the doughter of Potiphar prest of On bare vnto him. And the first called he Manasses: for God (sayde he) hath caused me to forget all my laboure, and all my fathers house. The seconde called he Ephraim : for God (sayde he) hath caused me to growe in § lande of my trouble.

Now whan y seuen plenteous yeares were ended in Egipte, then beganne the seuen deare yeares to come, 'wherof Ioseph had sayde. And there was derth in all landes, but in all the lāde of Egipte there was foode. Now whan the lande of Egipte beganne to suffre honger also, the people cryed vnto Pharao for bred. But Pharao sayde vnto all y Egipcians: Go vnto Ioseph, what he sayeth vnto you, y doo. So whan there was derth in all y läde, Ioseph opened all y was by him, g solde vnto the Egipcians. Thus y derth preuayled in the lande, g all countrees came to Egipte to bye at Ioseph : for the derth was mightie in all landes.

there is moch corne in Egipte, go downe g bye vs corne, y we maie lyue, g not dye. So Iosephs ten brethrē wente downe to bye corne in Egipte. As for Ben Iamyn Iosephs brother, Iacob wolde not let him go with his brethrē, for he sayde: Some mysfortune might happen vnto him. So y childrē of Israel came to bye corne, amonge other y came with them : for there was derth also in y lande of Canaan. But Ioseph was gouernoure in the lande, and solde corne vnto all the people in the lande.

Now whā his brethre came to him, they fell downe to the grounde before him vpon their faces. And he sawe them,  $\mathfrak{g}$  knewe thā, and helde him self straunge towarde them, and talked roughly with them, and saide vnto them: Whence come ye? They sayde: Out of the lande of Canaan to bye vytayle. Neuertheles though he knewe them, yet knewe they not him. And Ioseph thought vpon ŷ dreames that he had dreamed of them, and sayde vnto them: Ye are spyes, and are come to se where the lande is open.

33 They answered him: No my lorde, thy seruauntes are come to by vytayle: we are all one mans sonnes, we are vnfayned, and thy seruauntes were neuer spyes. He sayde vnto thē: No, but ye are come to se where the lande is open. They answered him: We thy seruauntes are twolue brethren, the sonnes of one man in the lāde of Canaan, and the yongest is with oure father: as for one, he is awaye.

Ioseph sayde vnto them : This is it that I sayde vnto you : spyes are ye. Here by wyll I proue you : By the life of Pharao ye shall not get hence, excepte youre yongest brother come hither. Sende awaye one of you to fetch youre brother, but ye shalbe in preson. Thus wyll I trye out youre wordes, whether ye go aboute with trueth or not: for els, by the life of Pharao ye are spyes. And he put the together in warde thre dayes longe.

V Vpon the thirde daye he sayde vnto thē: Yf ye wil lyue, thē do thus, for I feare God: Yf ye be vnfayned, let one of youre brethren lye bounde in youre preson: but go ye youre waye, and cary home the necessary foode, a brynge me youre yongest brother, so wyll I beleue youre wordes, that ye shall not dye. And so they dyd.

And they sayde one to another: This haue we deserved against oure brother, in that we sawe the anguysh of his soule, whan he besought vs, and we wolde not heare him: therfore cometh now this trouble vpon vs. Ruben answered them, and saide : Tolde not I vou v same, whan I sayde :* O synne not agaynst y lad, but ye wolde not heare. Now is his bloude requyred. But they knew not that Ioseph vnderstode it, for he spake vnto the by an interpreter. And he turned him from them, and wepte. Now whan he had turned him to them agayne, and talked with them, he toke Symon from amonge them, g bounde him before their eyes, and commaunded to full their sackes with corne, and to put euery mans money in his sack, and to geue euery one his expenses by the waye. And so was it done vnto them.

And they laded their corne vpon their Asses, and departed thence. But whan one opened his sacke to geue his Asse prouender in the Inne, he spyed his money in his sack mouth, and sayde vnto his brethren: My money is restored me agayne: lo, it is in my sack. Then their hertes fayled them, and they were afrayed amonge them selues, and sayde: Wherfore hath God done this vnto vs?

Now whan they came home to Iacob their father in the lade of Canaan, they tolde him all that had happened vnto them, a savde: The man that is lorde of the londe, spake roughly to vs, and toke vs for spyes of the countre. And whan we answered: we are vnfayned, a were neuer spyes, but are twolue brethren the sonnes of oure father: one is awaye, and the yongest is yet this daye with oure father in the lande of Canaan, He sayde: Hereby wyl I marke, that ye are vnfayned: Leaue one of youre brethren with me, a take foode necessary for youre houses, g go youre waye, and brynge youre yongest brother vnto me: so shal I knowe that ye are no spyes, but vnfayned: thē shal I delyuer you youre brother also, and ye maye occupie in the lande.

And whan they opened their sackes, euery H man founde his boundell of money in his sacke. And whā they and their father sawe, that it was the bundels of their money, they were afrayed.

So Israel dwelt in Egipte in the londe of Gosen, and had it in possession, and grew and multiplied exceadingly. And Iacob lyued seuentene yeare in the lande of Egipte, so that his whole age was an hudreth and seuen and fourtye yeares.

Now whan the tyme came that Israel shulde dye, he called Ioseph his sonne, and sayde vnto him: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sight, * then laye thine honde vnder my thye, ý thou shalt shewe mercy and faithfulnes vpon me, and not burye me in Egipte, but I will lye by my fathers, and thou shalt carye me out of Egipte, g burye me in their buryall. He sayde: I wil do as thou hast sayde. But he sayde: 'Then sweare vnto me. And he sware vnto him. 'Thē Israel bowed himself towarde the bed heade.

The rlbiij. Chapter.

FTER this it was tolde Ioseph: Beholde, thy father is sicke. And he toke with him his two sonnes Manasses and Ephraim. Then was it tolde Iacob: beholde, thy sonne Ioseph cometh vnto y. And Israel toke a corage vnto him, g sat vp vpō y bed, g sayde vnto Ioseph: The Allmightye God appeared vnto me ‡at Lus in y lāde of Canaan, Ţ blessed me,  $\alpha$  saide vnto me: Beholde, I wil cause  $\psi$ to growe a increase a wyll make a multitude of people of y, a wil geue this lade vnto thy sede after y for an euerlastinge possession. As for those that thou begettest after the, they shal be thine owne. But these shall named with the names of their brethren in their inheritaunce.

And whā I came out of Mesopotamia, Rachel dyed by me in the 'lande of Canaan, by the waye, whan there was yet but a feldes brede vnto Eprath: and I buryed her in the waye towarde Ephrath, which now is called Bethleem.

And Israel loked vpon Iosephs sonnes, g sayde: What are these? Ioseph answered: They are my sonnes, which God hath geuen me here. He sayde: Brynge the hither to me, y I maye blesse the. (For Israels eyes were heuy for age, g he coude not well se.)

Neuertheles his father wolde not, a saide: I knowe it well my sonne, I knowe it well, this shall be a people also, g shal be greate : but his yonger brother shal be greater the he, a his sede shal be full of people. So he blessed them the same daye a saide : In y shal Israel blesse, so y it shal be sayde : God set the as Ephraim & Manasses. <sup>4</sup>And so he set Ephraim aboue Manasses.

The first Chapter.

A THESE are y names of the "childre of Israel, that came with Iacob in to Egipte: euery one came in with his house, Ruben, Simeon, Leui, Iuda, Isachar, Zabulō, Ben Iamin, Dan, Nephtali, Gad and Aser. And of all the soules that came out of the loynes of Iacob, there were seventie.

As for Ioseph, he was in Egipte all ready. Now whā Ioseph was deed, and all his brethren, and all they that lyued at that tyme, the children of Israel grewe,<sup>6</sup> and increased, and multiplied, and became exceedinge mightie, so 5 the lande was full of them.

The came there a new kynge ouer Egipte, which knewe nothinge of Ioseph, and sayde vnto his people : Beholde, the people of the children of Israel are many, g mightier then we : Vp, let vs deale wysely with them, y there be not so many of them. For yf there shilde ryse vp eny warre agaynst vs, they might ioyne them selues also vnto oure enemies, and ouercome vs, g so get them out of the lande.

And he set worke masters ouer them, to kepe them vnder with burthens. (For they buylded the cities Phiton and Raemses, for treasuries vnto Pharao.) But the more they vexed them, the more they multiplied and grew.

Therfore had they indignaciō at the children of Israel, and the Egipcians compelled the children of Israel without mercy to do seruyce, and made their lyues bytter vnto them with greuous laboure in claye and brycke, and with allmaner of bondage in  $\mathfrak{F}$  felde, and with allmaner of laboure, which they layed vpon them without mercy.

And the kynge of Egipte sayde vnto the mydwyues of the Hebrueswemen. (Of the which one was called Siphra, and the other Pua:) Whan ye helpe the wemen of the Hebrues, and se vpon the stole, that it is a sonne, then slaye him: but yf it be a doughter, let her lyue. Neuertheles the mydwyues feared God, g dyd not as the kinge of Egipte commaunded them, but let the children lyue.

Then the kynge of Egipte called the mydwyues, and sayde vnto them : Wherfore do ye this, that ye let the children lyue? The mydwyues answered Pharao : The wemen of the Hebrues are not as the wemen of Egipte, for they are sturdy wemen: or euer the mydwyues come at them, they are delyuered.

Therfore God dealt well with the mydwyues. And the people multiplied, and became exceadinge mightie. And for so moch as the mydwyues feared God, *he made them houses. Then Pharao commaūded all his people and sayde: All the sonnes that are borne, cast in to the water, but let all the doughters lyue.

The ij. Chapter.

ND there wente forth a man of the house of Leui, ' and toke a doughter of ' And the wife conceaued and bare a sonne. And whan she sawe y it was a proper childe, she hyd him thre monethes. And whan she coude hyde him no longer, she toke an Arke of redes, and dawbed it ouer with slyme and pitch, and layed the childe therin, and set it amonge the redes by the waters brynke. But his sister stode a farre of, to wete what wolde come of him.

And Pharaos doughter came downe, to wash herself in the water : And hir maydens walked by the water syde : and whan she sawe the Arke amonge the redes, she sent one of hir maydens, and caused it to be fett. And whan she opened it, she sawe  $\S$  childe: and beholde the babe wepte. Then had she pytie vpon it, and sayde : It is one of the Hebrues children.

Then sayde his syster vnto Pharaos doughter: Shal I go, and call the a nurse of the Hebrues wemen, to nurse  $\hat{y}$  the childe? Pharaos doughter sayde vnto her: Go thy waye. The mayde wente, and called the childes mother. Then sayde Pharaos doughter vnto her: Take this childe, and nurse it for me, I wyll geue  $\hat{y}$  thy rewarde. The woman toke the childe, and nursed it.

And whan the childe was growne, she brought it vnto Pharaos doughter, and it became hir sonne, and she called him Moses. For she sayde: I toke him out of the water.

Vpon a tyme whan Moses was greate, he wente forth vnto his brethren, and loked vpon their burthens, and sawe, that an Egipcia smote one of his brethren ŷ Hebrues. And he loked rounde aboute him: and whan he sawe that there was no man, he slew the Egipcian, and buried him in the sonde.

And the LORDE sayde furthermore vnto him : Thrust thine hade in to thy bosome.

" Exo. 5. a. P Exo. 8. f. F Exo. 11. a. and 12. e.

And he thrust it in to his bosome,  $\mathfrak{q}$  toke it out: beholde, the was it leper like snowe. And he saide: Put it in to thy bosome agayne. And he put it agayne in to his bosome,  $\mathfrak{q}$  toke it out: beholde, the was it turned againe as his flesh. And thou shalt saie vnto Pharao: Thus sayeth ý LORDE: Israel is my firstborne sonne, g I saye vnto the: Let my sonne go, ý he maye serue me: Yf thou wilt not let him go, 'then wil I slaye thy firstborne sonne.

And as he was by the waye in the Inne, the LORDE met him, and wolde haue slayne him. Then toke Zipora *a stone, and circumcyded the foreskynne of hir sonne, and touched his fete, and sayde: A bloudy brydegrome art thou vnto me. Thē let he him go. But she sayde: A bloudy brydegrome, because of the circumcision.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Aaron: Go mete Moses in the wildernes. And he wēte, a met him on the mount of God, and kyssed him. And Moses tolde Aaron all the wordes of the LORDE, which had sent him: a all the tokens y he had charged him withall. And they wēte, a gathered all the elders of the childrē of Israel. And Aaron tolde all y wordes, y the LORDE had spokē vnto Moses: a dyd the tokens before the people, a the people beleued. And whan they herde y the LORDE vysited the children of Israel, and loked vpon their trouble, they bowed them selues, and worshipped.

The b. Chapter.

FTERWARDE wente Moses & Aaron, g spake vnto Pharao: Thus sayeth the LORDE the God of Israel: let my people go, ý they maye kepe holy daye vnto me in the wildernes. Pharao answered: †What felowe is the LORDE, that I must heare his voyce, and let Israel go? I knowe not the LORDE, nether wil I let Israel go.

They sayde: The God of the Hebrues hath called vs. Let vs go now therfore thre dayes iourney in the wildernes, g do sacrifice vnto the LORDE oure God, ý there happen not vnto vs pestilēce or swerde. Thē sayde ý kynge of Egipte vnto thē: Why make ye ý people (thou Moses g Aaron) to leaue their worke? Get you hēce to youre laboure. Pharao saide morouer: Beholde, ý people are to many in ý lande, and yet wil ye byd them ceasse from their laboure.

33 The same daye therfore dyd Pharao

cōmaunde the workmasters of the people, and their officers, and sayde: Ye shal not gather and geue the people eny more strawe, to burne bryck, as yesterdaye and yeryesterdaye. Let them go, and gather them strawe them selues. And the nombre of the brycke which they made yesterdaye g yeryesterdaye, shall ye laye vpon them neuertheles, and mynish nothinge therof: for they are ydle. Therfore crye they and saye: We wil go, and do sacrifice vnto oure God. Let the men be kepte downe with laboure, y they maye haue to do, n not to turne them selues to false wordes.

Then wente the workmasters of the people a their officers out, a spake vnto the people: Thus sayeth Pharao: There shall no strawe be genen you, go youre waye youre selues, and get you strawe, where ye can fynde it. But of youre laboure there shall nothinge be mynished. Then were the people scatted in all  $\hat{y}$  lande of Egipte, to gather stubble, that they might haue strawe.

And the workmasters haistied them forwarde,  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde: Fulfill youre daye worke, like as whan ye had strawe. And the officers of  $\mathfrak{f}$  children of Israel, whom Pharaos worckmasters had set ouer them, were beaten,  $\mathfrak{g}$  it was saide vnto them: Wherfore haue ye not fulfilled youre appoynted daye worke to daye and yesterdaye, like as in tymes past?

Than wente the officers of the children of Israel,  $\mathfrak{q}$  coplayned vnto Pharao: Wherfore wilt thou deale thus with thy seruauntes? Thy seruauntes haue no strawe geuen the,  $\mathfrak{q}$ yet must we make the brycke that are appoynted vs. And beholde, thy seruauntes are beaten,  $\mathfrak{q}$  thy people are euell intreated. Pharao sayde: Ye are ydle, ydle are ye, therfore saye ye: we will go, and do sacrifice vnto the LORDE. Go now youre waye therfore,  $\mathfrak{q}$  worke: there shall no strawe be geuen you, but the nombre of brycke shal ye delyuer.

Then sawe the officers of the children of  $\mathbf{B}$ Israel,  $\mathbf{\dot{y}}$  it was not amended, for it was sayde: ye shal mynish nothinge of the daye worke of the brycke. And whan Moses  $\mathbf{g}$  Aaron wente from Pharao, they came forth to mete them,  $\mathbf{g}$  sayde vnto them: The LORDE loke vpon you,  $\mathbf{g}$  iudge it, for ye haue made the sauoure of vs to stynke before Pharao and his seruauntes, and haue geuen them a swerde in their handes, to slaye vs.

And f Egipcians shal knowe, y I am the LORDE, whan I shal stretch out my hande vpon Egipte, and brynge the children of Israel out from amonge them.
- Moses and Aaron dyd as the LORDE comaŭded them. And Moses was foure score yeare olde, g Aaron thre g foure score yeare olde, whan they spake vnto Pharao. And ŷ LORDE sayde vnto Moses g Aaron: Whan Pharao sayeth vnto you: Shew youre wonders, then shalt thou saye vnto Aaron: Take thy staff, and cast it before Pharao, g it shal turne to a serpent.

Then wete Moses  $\mathfrak{g}$  Aaron in vnto Pharao,  $\mathfrak{g}$  dyd as the LORDE comaunded them. And Aaron cast his staff before Pharao  $\mathfrak{g}$ before his seruauntes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  it turned to a serpet. Then Pharao called for  $\mathfrak{F}$  wyse men  $\mathfrak{g}$  Sorcerers. And the Sorcerers of Egipte also dyd like wyse with their Sorceries, and euery one cast his staff before him,  $\mathfrak{g}$  they turned vnto serpentes. But Aarons staff deuoured their staues. So Pharaos hert was hardened, and he herkened not vnto them, euen as the LORDE had sayde.

C And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: The hert of Pharao is hardened, he refuseth to let ŷ people go. Get ŷ vnto Pharao in the mornynge, beholde, he shal come vnto ŷ water, mete thou him vpō the waters brynke, g take ŷ staff which turned to a serpēt, in thine hande, g saye vnto him: The LORDE God of the Hebrues hath sent me vnto the, g sendeth ŷ worde: 'Let my people go, that they maye

Therfore thus sayeth the LORDE: Hereby shalt thou knowe,  $\oint I$  am  $\oint LORDE$ . Beholde, with the staff  $\oint I$  haue in my hande, wil I smyte the water which is in  $\oint ryuer$ ,  $\mathfrak{g}$ it shal be turned in to bloude: so that the fishes in the ryuer shall dye,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the ryuer shall stynke:  $\mathfrak{g}$  it shall greue the Egipcians to drynke of  $\oint \mathfrak{g}$  water of the ryuer.

And  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE spake vnto Moses: Saye  $\mathfrak{B}$ vnto Aaron: Take thy staff,  $\mathfrak{g}$  stretch out thine hāde ouer  $\mathring{y}$  waters of Egipte, ouer their ryuers  $\mathfrak{g}$  brokes  $\mathfrak{g}$  pondes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  ouer all water poles,  $\mathring{y}$  they maye be turned to bloude,  $\mathfrak{g}$ that there maye be bloude in all  $\mathring{y}$  lande of Egipte, both in vessels of wodd and stone.

Moses a Aaron dyd as y LORDE comaunded them, g lift vp the staff, g smote the water y was in the ryuer, before Pharao a his seruauntes, g all the water in the ryuer was turned in to bloude, a the fysh in the ryuer dyed, a the ryuer stanke, so y the Egipcians coulde not drynke of the water of y ryuer, a there was bloude in all the lande of Egipte. And the Sorcerers also of Egipte, dyd likewyse with their Sorceries. But Pharaos hert was hardened, a he herkened not vnto the, like as the LORDE had sayde. And Pharao turned him self, a wente home, a set not his hert there on. All the Egipcias dygged roude aboute $ ryuer, for water to drinke: for they coude not drynke of 🕏 water out of the ryuer. And this endured seven dayes longe, that the LORDE smote the ryuer.

thy staff ouer the streames, a ryuers, a pondes, and let frogges come vpon the londe of Egipte. And Aaron stretched his hade ouer the waters in Egipte, a there came vp frogges, so y the londe of Egipte was couered.

The Sorcerers also dyd likewyse, with their Sorcerirs, (caused frogges to come vpō ỷ lōde of Egipte. Thē called Pharao for Moses (c Aaron, (csayde: * Praye the LORDE for me, ŷ he maye take awaye the frogges fro me (cfro my people, (cfl will let ŷ people go, ŷ they maye do sacrifice vnto the LORDE.

Moses sayde: Haue thou the honoure before me, a appoynte me, whā I shal praye for  $\mathfrak{f}$ , for thy serununtes and for thy people:  $\mathfrak{f}$  the frogges maye be dryuen awaye frō the a frō thy house, a remayne onely in the ryuer. He sayde: Tomorow. He sayde: Euen as thou lust sayde,  $\mathfrak{f}$  thou mayest knowe,  $\mathfrak{f}$  there is none like vnto the LORDE oure God: And the frogges shal be takē from the, a from thy house, from thy serunutes, a from thy people, a remayne onely in the ryuer.

So Moses  $\mathfrak{q}$  Aaron wete from Pharao,  $\mathfrak{q}$ Moses cried vnto the LORDE for the appoyntment ouer the frogges, which he had promysed vnto Pharao. And  $\mathfrak{P}$  LORDE dyd as Moses sayde. But whan Pharao sawe  $\mathfrak{P}$  he had gotten breth, his hert was hardened, and he herkened not vnto the, euen as the LORDE had sayde.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses: Saie vnto Aaron: Stretch out thy staff,  $\mathfrak{g}$  smyte the dust vpon the earth,  $\dot{y}$  there maye be lyse in the whole lode of Egipte. They dyd so. And Aaron stretched out his hande with his staff,  $\mathfrak{g}$  smote the dust vpon the earth,  $\mathfrak{g}$  there were lyse vpon men and vpon catell: All the dust of the lande was turned vnto lyse in all the lande of Egipte.

The Sorcerers also assayde likewyse with their Sorcerirs  $\mathring{y}$  they might brynge forth lyse, but they coude not. And  $\mathring{y}$  lyse were vpon men  $\mathfrak{q}$  catell. Then sayde  $\mathring{y}$  Sorcerers vnto Pharao: It is the fynger of God. But Pharaos hert was hardened,  $\mathfrak{q}$  he herkened not vnto the, even as the LORDE had sayde.

Thē called Pharao for Moses  $\mathfrak{c}$  Aaron,  $\mathfrak{g}$   $\mathfrak{f}$ sayde: Go youre waye,  $\mathfrak{g}$  do sacrifice vnto youre God in  $\mathfrak{f}$  londe. Moses sayde: It is not mete,  $\mathfrak{f}$  we shulde so do, so shulde we offer  $\mathfrak{f}$  abhominacion of  $\mathfrak{f}$  Egipcians vnto the LORDE oure God. Beholde, yf we shulde offer the abhominacion of  $\mathfrak{f}$  Egipcians before their eyes, shulde they not stone vs? Thre dayes iourney will we go in the wyldernes, and do sacrifice vnto the LORDE oure God  $\mathfrak{f}$  like as he hath sayde vnto vs.

Pharao sayde: Í wil let you go, ý ye maie do sacrifice vnto the LORDE youre God in the wyldernes (onely ý ye go no farther)  $\mathfrak{g}$ praye for me. Moses sayde: Beholde, whan I am come forth from  $\mathfrak{F}$ , I wil praye vnto ý LORDE, ý the cruell wormes maye be taken from Pharao,  $\mathfrak{g}$  from his seruaūtes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  frō his people, euen tomorow: onely disceaue me nomore, that thou woldest not let the people go to do sacrifice vnto the LORDE.

And Moses wete out from Pharao, and prayed vnto the LORDE. And the LORDE dyd as Moses sayde,  $\mathfrak{q}$  toke awaye the cruell wormes from Pharao, from his seruauntes, and from his people, so  $\mathfrak{f}$  there remayned not one. But Pharao hardened his hert eue then also, and let not  $\mathfrak{F}$  people go.

beholde, he wil go vnto the water, g speake thou vnto him : Thus saieth & LORDE : let my people go, y they may eserue me: yf not, beholde, I wil cause cruell wormes (or flyes) to come vpon the, thy seruauntes, thy people, a thy house, so y all the Egipcians houses, a the felde, and what theron is shall be full of cruell wormes: g the same daye wil I separate the londe of + Gosen, wherin my people are, so v no cruell worme shalbe there, that thou mayest knowe, that I am § LORDE in the myddest of the earth. And I wil set a delyueraunce betwene my people and thyne. Tomorow shal this token come to passe.

And the LORDE dyd so. And there came perlous cruell wormes in to Pharaos house, in to his seruauntes houses, a vpon all the londe of Egipte: and the londe was marred with noysome wormes.

The called Pharao for Moses a Aaron, alf sayde: Go youre waye, a do sacrifice vnto youre God in y londe. Moses sayde : It is not mete, y we shulde so do, so shulde we offer ŷ abhominacion of ŷ Egipcians vnto the LORDE oure God. Beholde, yf we shulde offer the abhominacion of y Egipcians before their eyes, shulde they not stone vs? Thre dayes iourney will we go in the wyldernes, and do sacrifice vnto the LORDE oure God ‡ like as he hath sayde vnto vs.

Pharao sayde : I wil let you go, y ye maie do sacrifice vnto the LORDE youre God in the wyldernes (onely y ye go no farther) a Moses sayde : Beholde, whan praye for me. I am come forth from  $\psi$ , I wil praye vnto  $\dot{y}$ LORDE, y the cruell wormes maye be taken from Pharao, a from his seruautes, a fro his people, euen tomorow: onely disceaue me nomore, that thou woldest not let the people go to do sacrifice vnto the LORDE.

And Moses wete ont from Pharao, and prayed vnto the LORDE. And the LORDE dyd as Moses sayde, a toke awaye the cruell wormes from Pharao, from his seruauntes, and from his people, so y there remayned not one. But Pharao hardened his hert eue then also, and let not § people go.

The rbi. Chapter.

ND they came vnto Elim, where there were twolue welles of water, and seuentie palme trees, and there they pitched by y water syde. From Elim they toke their iourney, and the whole congregacion of the children of Israel came in to the wyldernesse of Sin (which lyeth betwene Elim and Sinai) vpon the fyftene daye of the seconde moneth, after that they were departed out of the londe of Egipte. And y whole multitude of the children of Israel * murmured agaynst Moses and Aaron in V wildernes, and saide vnto them: Wolde God we had dyed in the londe of Egipte by the hande of the LORDE, whan we sat by ∲ flesh pottes, and had bred ynough to cate: for ye haue brought vs out in to this wyldernes, to cause this whole multitude dye of honger.

The sayde § LORDE vnto Moses: beholde I wyl rayne you bred from heauen, and let the people go out, and gather daylie, what they nede, that I maye proue whether they walke in my lawe or not. But vpon the sixte daye they shal prepare the selues, that they maye brynge in twyse as moch as they gather daylie.

Moses and Aaron saide vnto all the children of Israel: At euen ye shall knowe, that the LORDE hath brought you out of the lode of Egipte, and in the mornynge shall ye se the glory of the LORDE: for he hath herde youre grudginges agaynst the LORDE. For what are we, that ye grudge agaynst vs?

<sup>a</sup> Moses sayde morouer: At euen shall the LORDE geue you flesh to eate, and in the mornynge bred ynough: because  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE hath herde youre grudginges, that ye haue grudged agaynst him. For what are we? Youre murmuringe is not agaynst vs, but against the LORDE. And Moses sayde vnto Aaron: Speake vnto the whole multitude of  $\mathring{y}$  children of Israel: Come forth before the LORDE, for he hath herde youre murmuringes.

And whyle Aaron spake thus vnto the whole congregacion of the childrē of Israel, they turned them towarde the wyldernes: and beholde, the glory of the LORDE appeared in a cloude, and the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: I haue herde the murmuringe of  $\mathring{y}$  children of Israel. Tell them : At euen shall ye haue flesh to eate, and in the mornynge shal ye be fylled with bred,  $\mathfrak{g}$  ye shall knowe, that I am the LORDE youre God.

And at even the quayles came vp, and covered the tentes: and in the mornynge the dewe laye rounde aboute the tentes. And whan the dew was falle, beholde, there laye a thinge in the wildernes, thynne and small, as the horefrost vpon the grounde.

And whan the children of Israel sawe it, they saide one to another:† This is Mā. For they wyst not what it was. But Moses sayde vnto them: It is the bred that  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE hath geuē you to eate. This is it that  $\mathring{y}$ LORDE hath commaūded: Euery one gather for himself as moch as he eateth, and take a Gomor for euery heade, acordinge to the nombre of the soules in his tente.

And the children of Israel dyd so, and gathered some more, some lesse. But whan it was measured out with  $\mathbf{\hat{y}}$  Gomor, <sup>b</sup> be that gathered moch, had not the more: and he  $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ gathered litle, wanted nothinge, but euery one gathered for himself, as moch as he ate. And Moses sayde vnto them: Let no mā leaue ought therof vntyll the mornynge. But they harkened not vnto Moses. And some left of it vntill the morninge. Then waxed it full of wormes and stanke. And Moses was angrie at them.

And every mornynge they gathered for them selues, as moch as every one ate: but as soone as it was whote of the Sonne, it melted awaye. And vpon the sixte daye they gathered twyse as moch of bred, two Gomors for one. And all the rulers of the congregacio came in, and tolde Moses. And he sayde vnto them: This is it, that the LORDE | 鉅 hath sayde: Tomorow is the Sabbath of the holy rest of the LORDE: loke what ye wil bake, that bake: and what ye wyll seeth, that seeth and that remayneth ouer, let it remayne, y it maye be kepte vntyll the mornynge. And they let it remayne tyll the morow, as Moses commaunded. Then stanke it not. nether was there eny worme therin. Thē sayde Moses: Eate that to daye, for to daye is § Sabbath of the LORDE, to daye shal ye fynde none in the felde. Sixe dayes shall ye gather it, but the seventh daye is the Sabbath, whorin there shal be none.

His father in lawe sayde vnto him: It is not well that thou doest. Thou weeriest thy self, and the people that is with the. This busynesse is to sore for the, thou canst not perfourme it alone. But herken vnto my voyce, I will geue the councell, and God shall be with the. Be thou vnto the people to God warde, and brynge the causes before God, and prouide them with statutes and lawes, that thou mayest shewe the the waie wherin they shulde walke, and the workes that they shulde do.

But loke out amonge all the people, for honest men, that feare God, soch as are true, a hate couetousnes: make these rulers ouer them, some ouer thousandes, ouer hundredes, ouer fiftie, and ouer ten, that they maye allwaye iudge the people. But where there is 3 env greate matter, "that they brynge the same vnto the, and iudge the small causes them selues: so shall it be lighter for the, yf they beare the burthen with the. Yf thou shalt do this, then mayest thou endure the thinge that God chargeth the withall, and all this people maie go peaceably vnto their place.

<sup>b</sup> Moses herkened vnto the voyce of his father in lawe, and dyd all that he sayde. And he chose honest men out of all Israel, and made them heades ouer the people, some ouer thousandes, ouer hundredes, ouer fiftie, and ouer ten, that they might allwaye judge the people. As for soch causes as were herde, they brought them vnto Moses, and judged the small matters them selues. So Moses let his father in lawe departe in to his owne londe.

The rrb. Chapter.

ND § LORDE talked with Moses g sayde: 'Speake vnto § childrē of Israel, y they geue me an Heue offerynge, g take the some of euery man, that hath a fre wyllynge hert therto. And this is the Heueofferynge that ye shal take of them: Golde, syluer, brasse, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, whyte twyned sylke, goates hayre, reed skynnes of rammes, doo skynnes, Fyrre tre, oyle for lampes, spyces for the anoyntynge oyle, and for swete incense. Onix stones and set stones for the ouerbody cote and for the brestlappe.

And they shall make me a Sanctuary, that I maie dwell amonge them. Like as I shal shewe  $\mathfrak{F}$  a patrone of the Habitacion, and of all the ornamentes therof, so shall ye make it.

Make an Arke of Fyrre tre two cubytes ga half longe, 'a cubyte g a half brode, and a cubyte g an half hye: this shalt thou ouer leye with pure golde within and without, gmake an hye vpo it a crowne of golde rounde aboute, and cast foure rynges of golde, g put them in the foure corners of it, so that two rynges be vpon the one syde, and two vpon the other syde. And make staues of Fyrre tre, and ouer laye them with golde, and put them in the rynges alonge by the sydes of the Arke, to beare it withall: and they shal abyde styll in the rynges, g not be take out. And in § Arke thou shalt laye the wytnesse, that I wyl geue the. Thou shalt make a Mercyseate also of pure golde, two cubytes and a half longe, and a cubyte g a half brode.

And thou shalt make two Cherubyns of beaten golde  $vp\bar{o}$  both  $\hat{y}$  endes of the Mercyseate,  $\hat{y}$  the one Cherub maye be vpon the one ende,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the other vpon the other ende,  $\mathfrak{g}$ so to be two Cherubyns vpon the endes of the Mercyseate. And the Cherubyns shall sprede out their wynges ouer an hye,  $\dot{y}$  they maye couer  $\hat{y}$  Mercyseate with their wynges:  $\mathfrak{g}$   $\dot{y}$  either of their faces maye be right ouer one agaynst another, and their faces shal loke vnto the Mercyseate.

And thou shalt set  $\S$  Mercyseate aboue  $\mathbb{C}$ vpon the Arke. And in the Arke thou shalt laye the wytnesse,  $\S$  I shal geue the. "From  $\S$  place wyll I testifie vnto \$, and talke with the, namely, from \$ "Mercyseate (betwixte the two Cherubyns) which is vpon the Arke of wytnesse, of all that I wyl comaunde \$ vnto the children of Israel.

"Thou shalt make a table also of Fyrre tre, two cubites longe, and one cubyte brode, and a cubyte and a half hye, and ouerlaye it with pure golde, and make a crowne of golde rounde aboute it, and an whope of an hade brede hye, and a crowne of golde vnto  $\mathring{y}$ whope rounde aboute.

And vnto it thou shalt make foure rynges of golde, on the foure corners in the foure fete of it: harde vnder the whope shall yrynges be, to put in staues and to beare the table with all: and thou shalt make the staues of Fyrre tre, g ouerlaye them with golde, ythe table maye be borne therwith.

Thou shalt make also his diszshes, spones, pottes, and flat peces of pure golde, to poure out and in. And vpon the table thou shalt all waye set shewbred before me.

Morouer thou shalt make a candelsticke of fyne beaten golde, <sup>s</sup>where vpon shall be the shaft with braunches, cuppes, knoppes, and floures. Sixe braunches shall proceade out of the sydes of the candelsticke, out of euery syde thre braunches. Euery braunch shal haue thre cuppes, (like allmondes) thre knoppes, and thre floures. These shalbe the sixe braunches of the candilsticke. But the shaft of the candilsticke it self shal haue foure

And thou shalt make seuen lampes aboue there on, that they maye geue light one ouer agaynst another, and snoffers and out quenchers of pure golde. Out of an hundreth pounde weight of pure golde shalt thou make it, with all this apparell. *And se that thou make it after the patrone that thou hast sene in the mount.

The rrbi. Chapter.

A THE habitacion shalt thou make of ten curteynes, of whyte twyned sylke, of valowe sylke, of scarlet and purple. Cherubyms shalt thou make theron of broderd worke. The length of one curteyne shalbe eight and twentye cubytes § bredth foure cubytes: and all the ten shalbe like, and shalbe coupled fyue and fyue together, one vnto the other. And thou shalt make loupes of valowe sylke by the edge of euery curtayne, where they shalbe coupled together, that there maye be euer two and two fastened together vpon their edges: fiftie loupes vpon euery curteyne, that one maye fasten the other together. And thou shalt make fiftie buttons of golde, wherwith the curteynes maye be coupled together, one to the other, that it maye be one couerynge.

Thou shalt make a coueringe also of goates B heyer for a tente ouer the habitacion, <sup>a</sup> of eleuen curteynes. The length of one curteyne shalbe thirtie cubytes, the bredth foure cubytes. And all the eleuen shalbe alike greate: fyue shalt thou couple together by the selues, g sixe also by them selues, y thou mayest dubble the sixte curteyne in the fore front of the Tabernacle. And vpon euery curteyne thou shalt make fiftie loupes vpo the edges of them, that they maie be coupled together by the edges. And fiftie buttons of brasse shalt thou make, and put the buttons in to the loupes, that the tent maye be coupled together, and be one couerynge.

As for the remnaunt of the curteynes of the tente, thou shalt let the halfe parte hange ouer behynde \$ tēte, vpon both the sydes a cubyte longe,  $\dot{y}$  the resydue maye be vpon the sydes of the Tabernacle,  $\mathfrak{c}$  couer it vpon both the sydes.

Besydes this couerynge thou shalt make a  $\mathbb{C}$  couerynge of reed skynnes of rammes. And aboue this a coueringe of doo skinnes.

Thou shalt make bordes also for the habitacion, of Fyrre tre, which shall stonde: one borde shalbe ten cubytes longe, g a cubyte ga half brode. Two fete shal one borde haue, that one maye be set by the other.

Thus shalt thou make all the bordes for  $\hat{y}$ Tabernacle: Twentye of them shal stode towarde the south, which shal haue fourtye sokettes of syluer vnder them, two sokettes vnder euery borde for his two fete.

Likewyse vpon the other syde towarde the north there shall stonde twentye bordes also, and fourtye sokettes of syluer, two sokettes vnder euery borde.

But behynde the habitacion towarde  $\hat{y}$ west thou shalt make sixe bordes, and two bordes mo for the two corners of the habitacion, that euery one of them both maye be coupled from vnder vp with his corner borde, and aboue vpon the heade to come eauen together with a clāpe : so that there be eight bordes with their syluer sokettes, wherof there shalbe sixtene, two vnder euery borde.

And thou shalt make barres of fyrre tre, 3fyue for the bordes vpon the one syde of the Tabernacle, and fyue for the bordes vpon the other syde of the Tabernacle, and fyue for the bordes behinde  $\mathring{y}$  Tabernacle towarde the west. And the barres shalt thou shute thorow  $\mathring{y}$  myddest of the bordes, and fastē alltogether from  $\mathring{y}$  one corner to  $\mathring{y}$  other. And thou shalt ouerlaye the bordes with golde, and make their rynges of golde, that the barres maye be put therin. And the barres shalt thou ouerlaye with golde, and so shalt thou set vp the Tabernacle, acordinge to  $\mathring{y}$ fashion as thou hast sene vpon  $\mathring{y}$  mount.

And thou shalt make a vayle of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, g whyte twyned sylke. And Cherubyns shalt thou make theron of broderd worke, and shalt hange it vpon foure pilers of Fyrre tre which are ouerlayed with golde, hauynge knoppes of golde, and foure sokettes of syluer. And the vayle shalt thou festen with buttons, and set the Arke of wytnesse within the vayle, that it maye be vnto

And thou shalt set the Mercy seate vpon ø the Arke of wytnesse in the Most holy. But set the table without the vayle, and the candilsticke ouer agaynst y table vpon y south syde of the Tabernacle, that the table maie stonde on the north syde.

And in the dore of the Tabernacle thou shalt make an hanginge, of yalow sylke, purple, scarlet and whyte twyned sylke. And for the same hanginge thou shalt make fyue pilers of Fyrre tre, ouerlayed with golde, with knoppes of golde. And shalt cast fyue sokettes of brasse for them.

The rrbij. Chapter.

- A ND thou shalt make an altare of Firre tre, "fyue cubytes loss A maye be foure square, g thre cubytes hye: thou shalt make hornes vpon the foure corners of it,  $\pi$  shalt ouer laye it with brasse. Make ashpanes, shouels, basens, fleshokes, cole panes. All \$ apparell theref shalt thou make of brasse. Thou shalt make a gredyron also like a nett, of brase, a foure brasen rynges vpon the foure corners of it: from vnder vp aboute the altare shalt thou make it, so that the gredyron reach vnto y myddest of the altare. Thou shalt make staues also for the altare, of Fyrre tre, ouer layed with golde, and shalt put the staues in the rynges, that the staues maye be on both the sydes of valtare, to beare it withall. And holowe with bordes shalt thou make it, like as it is shewed the in the mount.
- B And to y habitacion thou shalt make a courte, an hangynge of whyte twyned sylke: vpõ v one syde an C. cubytes lõge towarde the south, g xx. pilers vpon xx. brasen sokettes, n the knoppes with their whopes of syluer. Likewyse vpon  $\psi$  north syde there shal be an hanginge of an C. cubytes loge, twenty pilers vpon twenty brasen sokettes, and their knoppes with their whopes of syluer.

But vpon the west syde the bredth of v courte shal haue an hanginge of fiftie cubites longe, a ten pilers vpon ten sokettes. Vpō the east syde also shal the bredth of the courte have fiftie cubytes, so that the hangynge have vpon one syde fyftene cubites, and thre pilers vpo thre sokettes: And vpon y other syde fiftene cubytes also, and thre pilers vpo thre sokettes.

And in the courte gate there shall an  $|_{\mathbb{C}}$ hangynge twenty cubytes brode, of valowe sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte twyned sylke, wrought with nedle worke, and foure pilers vpon their foure sokettes. All the pilers rounde aboute the courte shall have syluer whopes, a syluer knoppes, a sokettes of brasse. And the length of y courte shal be an hudreth cubytes, the bredth fiftie cubytes, the heygth fyue cubytes, of whyte twyned sylke and § sokettes therof shalbe of brasse. All y vessels also of the habitacion to all maner seruyce, and all the nales of it, and all the nales of the courte shalbe of brasse.

Commaunde y children of Israel, 'y they bringe vnto y the most cleare g pure oyle oliue beaten, to geue lighte, y it maye all waye be put in the lapes in the Tabernacle of wytnes without the vayle, that hangeth before the wytnesse. And Aaro and his sonnes shal dresse it from the euenynge vntyll v mornynge before the LORDE. This shallbe vnto you a perpetuall custome for youre posterities amonge the children of Israel.

The rrbiij. Chapter.

ND thou shalt take vnto the Aaron thy brother and his sonnes fro amonge the childre of Israel, that he maye be my prest: namely Aaron a his sonnes Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar and Ithamar: g thou shalt make holy clothes for Aarō thy brother, honorable and glorious, g shalt speake vnto all them that are wise of hert, whom I haue fylled with the sprete of wiszdome, that they make garmentes to Aaron for his consecracion, that he maye be my prest.

These are y garmentes which they shal make: a brestlappe, an ouerbody cote, a tunycle, an albe, a myter and a girdell. Thus shal they make holy garmentes for thy brother Aaro and his sonnes, that he maye be my prest. They shal take therto golde, yalow silke, scarlet, purple, and whyte sylke.

The ouerbody cote shal they make of golde, B yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, a whyte twyned sylke of broderd worke, that it maye be festened together vpon both the sydes by \$ edges therof. valowe sylke, scarlet, purple,  $\mathfrak{g}$  whyte twyned sylke. And thou shalt take two Onix stones, and graue in them the names of the children of Israel. Syxe names vpon the one stone, and the sixe other names vpon the other stone acordinge to the order of their age. This shalt thou do by the stonegrauers that graue signettes, so that  $\mathfrak{F}$  stones with the names of the children of Israel to be set rounde aboute with golde: and thou shalt put them vpon the two shulders of the ouer body cote, that they maye be stones of remembraunce for the children of Israel, that Aaron maye beare their names vpon both his shulders before the LORDE for a remembraunce.

C Thou shalt make hokes of golde also, and two wrethē cheynes of pure golde, and shalt fasten them vnto the hokes.

The brestlappe of judgment shalt thou make of broderd worke, euen after the worke of the ouerbody cote: of golde, yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte twyned sylke. Foure square shall it be and dubble, an hande bredth longe, and an handebredth brode. And thou shalt fill it with foure rowes full of stones. Let the first rowe be a Sardis; a Topas, and a Smaragde. The seconde : a Ruby, a Saphyre, and a Dyamonde. The thirde: a Ligurios, an Achatt, and an Ametyst. The fourth: a Turcas, an Onix, and a Iaspis. In golde shall they be sett in all the rowes, and shal stonde acordinge to y twolue names of the children of Israel, grauen of the stonegrauers, euery one with his name acordinge to the twolue trybes.

And vpon the brestlappe thou shalt make wrethen cheynes by y corners of pure golde, and two golde rynges, so, that thou fastē the same two rynges vnto two edges of the brestlappe, and put the two wrethē cheynes of golde in the same two rynges, that are in two edges of the brestlappe. But the two endes of y two wrethen cheynes shalt thou fasten in the two hokes vpon the ouerbody cote one ouer agaynst another.

And thou shalt make two other rynges of golde, and fasten them vnto y other two edges of y brestlappe, namely to y borders therof, wherwith it maye hange on the ynsyde vpon the ouerbody cote. And yet shalt thou make two rynges of golde, and fasten them vpon the two edges beneth to the ouerbody cote, vpon the outsyde one ouer agaynst another, where the ouerbody cote ioyneth together. And the brestlappe shall be fastened by his rynges vnto the rynges of the ouerbody cote with a yalow lace, that it maye lye close vpon the ouerbody cote, and that the brestlappe be not lowsed from the ouerbody cote.

Thus shall Aaron beare the names of the children of Israel in  $\hat{y}$  brestlappe of iudgment vpon his hert, whan he goeth in to the Sanctuary, for a remembraunce before the LORDE allwaye. And in the brestlappe of iudgment thou shalt put \* light and perfectnesse, that they be vpon Aarōs hert, whan he goeth in before the LORDE, and that he maye beare the iudgment of the children of Israel vpon his hert before the LORDE allwaye.

Thou shalt make the tunykle also to the ouerbody cote all of yalow sylke, and aboue in the myddest there shal be an hole, and a bonde folden together rounde aboute the hole, that it rente not. And beneth vpon the hemme thou shalt make pomgranates of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple rounde aboute, and belles of golde betwixte the same rounde aboute : that there be euer a golden bell and a pomgranate, a golden bell and a pomgranate "rounde aboute the hemme of the same tunycle. And Aaron shall haue it vpon him whā he mynistreth, that the soūde therof maye be herde, whan he goeth out and in at the Sanctuary before the LORDE, that he dye not.

Thou shalt make a foreheade plate also of pure golde, and graue therin (after the workmanshipe of the stone grauer): the holynes of the LORDE,  $\underline{\alpha}$  with a yalow lace shalt thou fasten it vnto the fore front of the myter vpon Aarons fore heade,  $\frac{1}{y}$  Aaron maie so beare  $\frac{1}{y}$  synne of the holy thinges, which the childre of Israel halowe in all their giftes and Sanctuary. And it shall be allwaye vpon his fore heade, that he maye reconcyle them before the LORDE.

Thou shalt make an albe also of whyte sylke, and a myter of whyte sylke, and a gyrdle of nedle worke.

And for Aarons sonnes thou shalt make cotes, gyrdles and bonetes, honorable and glorious, and shalt put them vpon thy brother Aaron and his sonnes, and shalt anoynte them, and fyll their handes, and consecrate them, that they maye be my prestes. And seuenth daye is the Sabbath * the holy rest of the LORDE. Who so doth eny worke vpon the Sabbath daye, shall dye the death.

Therfore shal the children of Israel kepe the Sabbath, that they maye kepe it also amonge their posterities for an euerlastynge couenaunt. An euerlastynge token is it betwixte me and the children of Israel. For in sixe dayes made the LORDE heauē  $\alpha$ earth, but vpon  $\hat{y}$  seuenth daye he rested, and was refreshed.

<sup>a</sup> And whan the LORDE had made an ende of talkinge with Moses vpon the mount Sinai, he gaue him two tables of witnesse, which were of stone, and wrytten with the fynger of God.

The prrij. Chapter.

a DUT whan the people sawe that Moses n made loge taryenge to come downe fro the mount, they gathered the together agaynst Aaron, g sayde vnto him: 'Vp, and make vs goddes, to go before vs, for we can not tell what is become of this man Moses, that brought vs out of Egipte. Aaron sayde vnto them: 'Plucke of the golden earynges from the eares of youre wyues, of youre sonnes,  $\alpha$ of youre doughters, g brynge them vnto me. Then all the people pluckte of their golden earynges from their eares, a brought them And he toke them of their vnto Aaron. handes,  $\sigma$  fashioned it with a grauer. <sup>d</sup> And they made a molten calfe, and sayde: These are thy goddes (O Israel) that brought the out of the londe of Egipte.

33 Whan Aaron sawe that, he buylded an altare before him, and caused it be proclamed, and sayde: Tomorow is the LORDES feast. And they arose vp early in the mornynge, and offred burntofferynges, and brought deadofferynges also: 'Then the people sat them downe to eate and drynke, a rose vp to playe.

• <sup>f</sup> But the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Go get the downe, for thy people whom thou broughtest out of the londe of Egipte, haue marred all: they are soone gone out of the waie, which I commaunded them. They haue made them a molten calfe, and haue worshipped it,  $\mathfrak{q}$  offred vnto it,  $\mathfrak{q}$  sayde: + These

And the LORDE sayde vnto Moses: I se,  $\mathbf{C}$ " that it is a styffnecked people, and now suffre me, that my wrath maye waxe whote ouer them,  $\mathbf{C}$  that I maye consume them, so wil I make a greate people of the.

But Moses be sought the LORDE his God, g sayde: Oh LORDE, wherfore wil thy wrath waxe whote ouer thy people, whom thou hast brought out of the lode of Egipte with greate power g a mightie hade? Wherfore shulde the Egipcians speake, a saye: He hath brought the for their myschefe, to slave them in the mountaynes, and to destroye the vtterly from the earth? O turne the from 2 the fearcenesse of thy wrath, t be gracious ouer the wickednesse of thy people. Remembre thy seruaütes Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, vnto who ‡thou swarest by thyne owne self, and saydest: I wil multiplye youre sede as the starres of heaven, and all the londe that I haue promysed you, wil I geue vnto youre Thus sede, g they shall inheret it for euer. the LORDE repented of the euell, which he sayde he wolde do vnto his people.

Moses turned him,  $\mathfrak{g}$  wente downe from the mount, and in his hande he had the two tables of wytnesse, which were wryttē vpon both the sydes, and were Gods worke,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the wrytinge was the wrytinge of God therin. Now whan Iosua herde the noyse of  $\mathfrak{F}$  people, as they shouted, he sayde vnto Moses: This is a noyse of warre in the hoost. He answered: It is not a noyse of them that haue the victory, and of them that haue the worse, but I heare a noyse of synginge at a daunse.

Whan he came nye vnto the hoost, and  $\mathbf{E}$ sawe the calfe, and the daunsynge, "he was moued with wrath, and cast the tables out of his hande, and brake them beneth the mount. 'And he toke the calfe that they had made, and brent it with fyre, and stamped it vnto poulder, and strowed it in the water,  $\mathbf{g}$  gaue it vnto the children of Israel to drynke,  $\mathbf{g}$ sayde vnto Aaron: What dyd this people vnto the, that thou hast brought so greate a synne vpon them ?

Aaron sayde: Let not the wrath of my lorde waxe fearce: thou knowest, that this is

Then all the children of Leui gathered them selues vnto him, and he sayde vnto them : Thus sayeth the LORDE the God of Israel: Euery man put his swerde by his syde, and go thorow in and out from one gate to another in the hoost, and slave every man his brother, frende, a neghboure.

The children of Leui dyd, as Moses sayde vnto them. And there fell of the people the same daye thre thousande men. The sayde Moses : Cosecrate youre handes this daie vnto the LORDE, euery man vpon his sonne and brother, that the prayse maye be geuen ouer you this daye.

Now wha Moses came agayne vnto v LORDE, he saide: Oh this people haue done a greate synne, a haue made them goddes of golde. * Now for geue them their synne: yf not, the wype me out of thy boke, that thou hast wrytten. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: What? Him that synneth against me, wil I wype out of tmy boke. Go thou thy waye therfore, and brynge § people thither as I haue sayde vnto the, Beholde, myne angell shall go before the. But in the daye of my visitacion I wyll vyset their synnes vpon them. So the LORDE plaged the people, because they made y calfe which Aaron made.

The prrb. Chapter.

ND Moses gathered all the corregacion  $\Re$ of  $\mathring{y}$  childre of Israel together, and sayde vnto them: This is it,  $\mathring{y}$  the LORDE hath commaunded you to do: <sup>d</sup>Sixe dayes shall ye worke, but the seuenth daye shall ye kepe holy: a Sabbath of the LORDES rest. Who so ever doeth eny worke therin, shall dye. Ye shal kyndle no fyre vpon the Sabbath daye in all youre dwellynges.

And Moses sayde vnto ŷ whole congregacion of the children of Israel: This is it, that the LORDE hath commaunded: 'Geue from amonge you Heue offerynges vnto ŷ LORDE, so that euery one brynge the LORDES Heue offerynge with a fre hert: golde, syluer, brasse, yalowe sylke, scarlet, purple, whyte sylke, and goates hayre, reed skynnes of rammes, doo skynnes, and Fyrre tre, oyle for the lampes, and spyces for the anoyntinge oyle and for swete incense. wolde of fre will, the same brought they for an Heue offerynge vnto the LORDE for  $\hat{y}$ worke of the Tabernacle of witnesse, g for all the seruyce therof, g for the holy vestimetes. Both men g wemen that were of a wyllynge hert, brought bracelettes, earynges, rynges ggyrdels, and all maner lewels of golde: Euery man also brought golde for Waue offerynges vnto the LORDE.

And who so euer foūde by him yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, whyte sylke, goates hayre, reed skynnes of rāmes, and Doo skynnes, brought it. And who so euer houe up syluer g brasse, brought it for  $\mathring{y}$  Heue offerynge vnto the LORDE. And who so euer founde Fyrre tre by him, brought it for all maner of worke of the Gods seruyce. And soch wemen as were wyse herted, spanne with their hādes, and brought their sponne worke of yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, and whyte sylke. And soch wemen as had hye vnderstondinge in wyszdome, spanne goates hayre.

As for  $\mathring{y}$  prynces, they brought Onix stones, and set stones, for  $\mathring{y}$  ouerbody coate, and for the brestlappe, and spyces, and oyle for  $\mathring{y}$ lightes, and for the anoyntinge oyle, and for swete incense. Thus the children of Israel brought fre wyllynge offerynges, both man and wemē, for all maner of worke, that the LORDE had commaunded by Moses, to be made.

And Moses saide vnto the childre of Israel: "Beholde, y LORDE hath called by name Bezaleel y sonne of Vri, y sonne of Hur of the trybe of Iuda, a hath fylled him with the sprete of God, that he maye haue wyszdome, vnderstondinge, a knowlege for all maner of worke, to worke connyngly in golde, syluer a brasse, to graue precious stones q to set them, to carue in wodd, to make all maner of connynge workes, and hath geuē instruccion in his hert, both him and Ahaliab the sonne of Ahisamach of y trybe of Dan. These hath he fylled with wyszdome of hert, to make all maner of worke, to carue, to broder, to worke with nedle worke, with yalow sylke, scarlet, purple and whyte sylke, and with weeuynge to make all maner of worke, and to deuyse connynge workes.

The rrrbi. Chapter.

THEN wrought Bezaleel g Ahaliab g all the wyse herted men, vnto whom the LORDE had geuen wyszdome g vnderstondinge to knowe, how they shulde make all maner worke for the seruyce of the Sanctuary, acordinge vnto all  $\S$  the LORDE commaunded. And Moses called for Bezaleel  $\mathfrak{g}$ Ahaliab,  $\mathfrak{g}$  all the wyse herted men, vnto whom the LORDE had geuen wyszdome in their hertes, namely, all soch as wyllingly offred them selues there,  $\mathfrak{g}$  came to laboure in the worke. And they receaued of Moses all the Heue offerynges, that the children of Israel had brought for the worke of the seruyce of the Sanctuary, that it might be made:  $\mathfrak{g}$  euery morninge brought they their willinge offerynges vnto him.

Then came all the wyse men ý wrought in the worke of the Sanctuary, euery one frö his worke that he made, g sayde vnto Moses: The people bryngeth to moch, more the nede is for the worke of this seruice, which the LORDE hath comaunded to make. The commaunded Moses, that it shulde be proclamed thorow out the hoost: No man brynge more to the Heue offerynge of the Sanctuary. Then were the people forbydden to brynge: for there was stuff ynough for all maner of worke, that was to be made, and to moch.

So all  $\mathring{y}$  wyse herted men amonge the  $\mathring{y}$ <sup>6</sup>wrought in  $\mathring{y}$  worke of the Habitacion, made ten curtaynes of whyte twyned sylke, yalow sylke, scarlet, purple, with Cherubyns of broderd worke. The legth of one curtayne was eight and twentye cubites, and the bredth foure cubites,  $\mathfrak{q}$  were all of one measure:  $\mathfrak{q}$  he coupled the curtaynes fyue  $\mathfrak{q}$  fyue together one to the other.

And made yalow loupes a longe by  $\mathring{y}$  edge Cof euery curtayne, where they shulde be coupled together: fiftie loupes vpō euery curtayne, wherby one might be coupled to another. And made fiftie buttons of golde, and with the buttons he coupled the curtaynes together one to the other, that it might be one couerynge.

<sup>c</sup> And he made xj. curtaynes of goates hayre (for the tent ouer the habitacion) of thirtie cubytes longe,  $\mathfrak{g}$  foure cubytes brode, all of one measure,  $\mathfrak{g}$  coupled fyue together by them selues, and sixe by them selues,  $\mathfrak{g}$  made fiftie loupes a longe by  $\mathfrak{f}$  edge of euery curtayne, wherby they might be coupled together,  $\mathfrak{g}$ made fiftie buttons of brasse, to couple  $\mathfrak{f}$  tent together withall. A ND Bezaleel made the Arke of Fyrre tre, <sup>b</sup>two cubites and a half loge, a cubyte and a half brode, and a cubyte g a half hye, and ouerlayed it with fyne golde within and without, and made a crowne of golde vnto it rounde aboute, and cast for it foure rynges of golde to the foure corners of it, vpon euery syde two. And made staues of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed the with golde, and put them in the rynges a longe by § sydes of the Arke, to beare it withall. And he made  $\mathring{y}$  Mercyseate of pure golde two cubytes and a half longe, and a cubite and a half brode,  $\mathfrak{g}$  made two Cherubyns of fyne beaten golde vpon the two endes of the Mercyseate: One Cherub vpon the one ende, and the other Cherub vpon the other ende: and the Cherubyns spredde out their wynges aboue an hye, and couered  $\mathring{y}$  Mercyseate ther with: and their faces stode one ouer agaynst the other, and loked vnto the Mercyseate.

And he made y table, of Fyrre tre, two B cubytes longe, 'a cubyte brode, and a cubyte g a half hye, and ouerlayed it with fyne golde. and made therto a crowne of golde rounde aboute, and made vnto it an whoope of an hande bredth hye, and made a crowne of golde rounde aboute the whoope. And for it he cast foure golde rynges, g put them in the foure corners by the fete harde by the whoope, that the staues might be therin, to beare the table withall: g made the staues of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed the with golde, to beare the staues withall. And the vessels vpon the table made he also of fyne golde : the disshes, spones, flat peces and pottes, to poure in and out withall.

And he made the candilsticke of fyne beaten golde, "where vpon was the shaft with braūches, cuppes, knoppes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  floures. And he made the seuen lampes with their snoffers  $\mathfrak{g}$  outquenchers of pure golde. Of an hūdreth weight of golde made he it, and all the apparell thereof.

He made also the altare of incense, of Fyrre H tre, a cubyte longe and brode, eauen foure squared, and two cubytes hye with the hornes of it, and ouerlayed it with fyne golde, the toppe and the sydes of it rounde aboute, and the hornes therof, and made a crowne vnto it rounde aboute of pure golde,  $\mathfrak{g}$  two golde rynges vnder the crowne on both the sydes, to put the staues therin, and to beare it withall: but the staues made he of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed them with golde.

ND the altare of burntoffrynges made he of Fyrre tre, <sup>a</sup>fyue cubytes loge a brode, eauen foure squared, a thre cubites hye. And made foure hornes, which proceaded out of the foure corners therof, and ouerlaied it with brasse. And he made all maner of vessels for the altare, cauldrons, shouels, basens, fleshokes, and colepannes all of brasse. And vnto the altare he made a brasen gredyron of net worke rounde aboute, from vnder vp vnto the myddest of the altare, g cast foure rynges in the foure corners of the brasen gredyron, for the staues: which he made of Fyrre tre, and ouerlayed them with brasse, and put them in the rynges by the sydes of the altare, to beare it withall, and made it holowe with bordes.

And he made the Lauer of brasse,  $\mathfrak{g}$  his fote also of brasse vpon the place of  $\mathfrak{F}$  hoost, that laye before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse.

B And he made the courte on y south syde: hangynges an hundreth cubytes longe, of whyte twyned sylke, with the twetye pilers therof, and twentye sokettes of brasse: but the knoppes and whopes of syluer. In like maner vpon the north syde an hundreth cubytes with twentye pilers, and twentye sokettes of brasse, but their knoppes a whoopes of syluer. ## The rl. Chapter.

ND & LORDE spake vnto Moses, g A sayde: In the fyrst daye of the first moneth shalt thou set vp y Habitacio of y Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shal put the Arke of wytnes therin, and hange the vayle before $ Arke. And thou shalt bringe in the table, and garnish it, and brynge in the cādilsticke, and put the lampes theron. And y goldē altare of incense shalt thou set before * Arke of wytnesse, t hange vp the hanginge in the dore of the Habitacio. But the altare of burntofferinges shalt thou set before the dore of the Habitacion of the Tabernacle of wytnesse: a the lauer betwixte the Tabernacle of wytnesse and the altare, and put water therin, a set the courte rounde aboute, and hange vp the hanginge in the courte gate.

B And thou shalt take the anoyntynge oyle, and anoynte the Habitacion and all that is there in, *and shalt consecrate it, and all $ apparell therof, that it maye be holy. And thou shalt anoynte the altare of burntofferynges and all his vessels, and consecrate it, that it maye be most holy. The lauer also g his fote shalt thou anoynte a consecrate.

"And thou shalt brynge Aaron a his sonnes vnto the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and wash them with water, a put the holy vestimentes vpon Aaron, and anoynte him, and consecrate him, that he maye be my prest. And thou shalt brynge his sonnes also, and put the albes vpon them, and anoynte them, as thou hast anoynted their father, y they maye be my prestes. And this anountinge shall they have for an everlastinge presthode amonge their posterities. +And Moses dyd all as the LORDE comaunded him.

<sup>b</sup>Thus was the Tabernacle set vp in the seconde yeare vpon the first daye of the first moneth. And whan Moses reared it vp, he fastened $ sokettes and the bordes, and barres, and set vp the pilers, and spred out the tent ouer the Habitacion, and put the couerynge of the tent aboue an hye, as the LORDE commaunded him. And he toke the wytnesse, and layed it in the Arke, and put y staues in the Arke, and set the Mercyseate aboue vpon the Arke, and brought the Arke in to the Habitacion, and hanged the vayle before the Arke of wytnesse, as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set the table in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, in the corner of the Habitacion vpon the north syde without the vayle, and prepared bred theron before $ LORDE ‡as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set in the candilsticke also, euen 3 ouer agaynst the table, in the corner of the Habitacion vpon the south syde, and put the lampes theron before y LORDE, as the LORDE commaunded him. And the golden altare set he in also before the vayle, and brent swete incense theron, as the LORDE commaunded him. And hanged vp the hangynge in the Tabernacle dore. As for the altare of burntofferynges, he set it before the dore of the Habitacion of y Tabernacle of wytnesse, and offred burntofferynges and meate offerynges theron, as the LORDE commaunded him.

'And the Lauer set he betwixte the Tabernacle of wytnesse and v altare, and put water therin to wash withall. And Moses, Aaron and his sonnes washed their hades and fete ther at: for they ought to wash the, whan they wente in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, or whan they wente vnto the altare, as the LORDE commaunded him.

And he set vp the courte rounde aboute E the Habitacion and the altare, and hanged vp ý hanginge in ý courte gate. Thus Moses fynished the whole worke.

Then a cloude couered y Tabernacle of wytnesse, and the glory of the LORDE fylled the Habitacion. And Moses could not go in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse, whyle the cloude abode theron, and the glory of § LORDE fylled the Habitacion.

And whan the cloude remoued from the Habitacion, then wente the children of Israel forth, as oft as they toke their iourney. But yf the cloude remoued not, then toke not they their journey, tyll the daie that it remoued: for in the daye tyme was the cloude of the LORDE vpon the Habitacion, a in the night season was fyre therin, in y sight of all y house of Israel, in all their journeis.

synofferynge whose bloude is brought in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse to make an attonement, shall not be eaten, but burnt with fyre.

The bij. Chapter.

ND this is the lawe of the trespaceofferynge, and it shal be most holy. In the place where the burntofferynge is slayne, shall the trespaceofferynge be slayne also, g there shall of his bloude be sprenkled rounde aboute vpon the altare. And all his fat shalbe offered: the rompe and the fat y couereth the bowels, the two kydneys with the fat y is theron vpon the loynes, and the net on the lever upon the kydneys also. And the prest shal burne it vpon the altare for an offerynge vuto the LORDE. This is a trespaceoffervuge.

All the males amonge the prestes shal eate it in the holy place, for it is most holy: euen as the synofferynge, so shall the trespaceofferynge be also, they shall both haue one lawe: and it shal be the prestes, that reconcyleth ther with. Loke which prest offereth eny mans burntofferynge, the skynne of the same burntoffrynge that he hath offered, shalbe his. And every meatofferynge that is baken in the ouen, rosted vpon the gredyron, or fryed in the panne, shal be the prestes y offereth it. And euery meatofferynge v is myngled with oyle, or drye, shal belonge vnto all Aaron sonnes, vnto one as well as another.

And this is $ laws of the healthofferinge, that is offered vnto the LORDE, * Yf they wyll offre a sacrifice of thankesgeuynge, then shal they offre vnleueded cakes megled with oyle, and swete wafers straked ouer with oyle, and fryed cakes of fyne floure mengled with oyle. This offerynge also shall they brynge vpon a cake of leuended bred, to the thankofferynge of his healthofferynge : and of them all he shall offre one for an Heueofferynge vnto the LORDE. And it shalbe the prestes, that sprenkleth the bloude of the healthofferynge. And the flesh of the thankofferynge in his healthofferynges, shalbe eaten the same daye that it is offred, and there shall nothinge be left ouer vntyll the mornynge.

And whether it be a vowe or a fre wylofferynge, tit shalbe eaten the same daye that it is offred: yf ought be left ouer vntyll the mornynge, yet maye it be eaten. But loke what remayneth vnto y thirde daye of the flesh that is offred, it shalbe brent with the fyre. And yf eny man vpon the thirde daie eate of y offred flesh of his healthofferynge, he shall not be accepted that offred it. Nether shall it be rekened vnto him, but it shalbe refused. And loke which soule eateth therof, the same is giltie of a mysdede.

And the flesh that toucheth eny vncleane [C thinge, shal not be eaten, but burnt with the fyre. But who so euer is cleane of body, shal eate of the flesh : and the soule that eateth of flesh of f healthofferynge which belongeth vnto the LORDE, his vnclennes be vpon him, and he shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

And whan a soule toucheth env vncleane thinge, whether it be an vncleane man, catell, or eny other abhominacion that is, and eateth of the flesh of the burntofferynge, that belongeth vnto the LORDE, the same shalbe roted out from amonge his people.

And the LORDE talketh with Moses, and sayde : Speake vnto the children of Israel, a saye: "Ye shall eate no fat of oxen, lambes, and goates: neuerthelesse the fat of it that dyeth alone, and of soch as is torne of wylde beastes, that maye ye occupye to all maner of vses, but ye shall not eate it.

For who so euer eateth the fat of  $\mathring{v}$  beest that is genen vnto the LORDE for an offerynge, the same soule shalbe roted out from his people. Morouer, ‡ ye shall eate no bloude, nether of catell, ner of foules, where so euer ye dwell. What soule eateth eny bloude, the same shall be roted out from his people.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, and saye: Who so wyll offre his healthofferynge vnto the LORDE, the same shall also brynge with all, that belongeth vnto y healthofferynge for the LORDE. But he shall brynge it with his hande for the offerynge of the LORDE: namely the fat vpon the brest shall he brynge, with the brest, to be a Waueofferynge before the LORDE. And the prest shall burne the fat upon the altare, and the brest shalbe Aarons and his sonnes.

And the right shulder shal they geue vnto 3 the prest for a gift of their healthofferynges. And loke which of Aarons sonnes offreth the bloude of the healthofferynges, and the fat,

Then sayde s: This is it, which the LORDE comded that ye shulde do, and then shall lory of § LORDE appeare vnto you. Moses sayde vnto Aaron: Go vnto § and *offre thy synofferynge and thy offerynge, and make an attonemet for the or the people. Then offre the peoples nge, and reconcyle them also, as the RDE hath commaunded.

<sup>b</sup> And Aaron wente vnto the altare, and slewe y calfe for his synofferynge, a his sonnes brought the bloude vnto him. And he dypte his fynger in the bloude, and put it vpon the hornes of the altare, and poured y bloude vpon y botome of the altare. As for the fat and the kydneys a the net vpon the leuer of the synofferynge, he burnt the vpon the altare, as the LORDE comaunded Moses. The flesh also and the hyde burnt he with fyre without the hoost.

Afterwarde he slewe the burntofferinge, C and Aarons sonnes brought the bloude vnto him, a he sprenkled it rounde aboute vpon the altare. And they brought him the burntofferynge in peces, a the heade : a he burnt it vpon the altare. And he washed the bowels and the legges, and burnt them aboue vpon the burntofferynge on the altare.

'Then brought he the offerynge of the people, and toke the goate, that synofferynge of the people, and slewe it, and made a synofferynge therof, as of the fyrst. And brought the burntofferynge, and dyd as the lawe is: and brought the meatofferynge, and toke his handfull, <sup>7</sup> and burnt it vpon the altare, besyde the burntofferinge of the mornynge.

Afterwarde slewe he the oxe and the ramme B for the healthofferynge of the people. And his sonnes brought him the bloude, which he

But the fat of the oxe g of the ramme, the rompe, and the fat that couereth the bowels, g the kydneyes, g the net vpon the leuer, all soch fat laied they vpon the brest, and burnt the fat vpon the altare. But the brest and the "right shulder waued Aaron for a Waueofferynge before the LORDE, as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

And Aaron lift vp his hāde ouer the people, and blessed them, and came downe from the worke of the synofferynge, burntofferynge, and healthofferynge. And Moses and Aaron wente in to the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And whan they came out agayne, they blessed the people. Then appeared the glory of the LORDE vnto all the people. For there came *a fyre from the LORDE, and vpon the altare it consumed the burntofferynge and the fat. Whan all the people sawe that, they reioysed, and fell vpon their faces.

For this dutye is geuen vnto the and thy children in the deedofferynges of the children of Israel. For the Heueshulder and the Wauebrest to the offerynges of the fat, shalbe brought in, that they maye be waued for a Waueofferinge before the LORDE. Therfore is it thine and thy childrens for a perpetuall dutye, as the LORDE commaunded.

And Moses sought for the goate of the synofferynge, and founde it burnt. And he was angrie at Eleasar and Ithamar \$ sonnes of Aaron, which were left alyue, and sayde: Wherfore haue ye not eaten the synofferynge in the holy place? for it is most holy,  $\frak{g}$  he hath geuen it you, that ye might beare \$ synne of the cogregacion, to make agremet for them before the LORDE. Beholde, the bloude of it came not in to the Sanctuary: Ye shulde haue eaten it in the Sanctuary, as I was commaunded.

Aaron sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, this daye haue they offred their synofferynge  $\mathfrak{g}$ their burntofferynge before  $\mathfrak{F}$  LORDE. And it is chaunsed me after this maner. And shulde I eate of the synofferynge to daye,  $\mathfrak{g}$  be mery before the LORDE? Whan Moses herde that, he was content.

Whan a man or woman is skyruye vpon the E heade or beerd, and the prest seyth the mark, and fyndeth that it appeareth deper then the other skynne, and the hayre be there golde and thynne, then shal he judge him vncleane: for it is a skyrfe of leprosy of the heade or of the beerde. # The riff. Chapter.

ND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, a and sayde: This is the lawe ouer § whan he shalbe clensed. *He shall vnto ÿ prest, and the prest shal go out hoost, and loke how the plage of leis healed vpon the leper. And he ommaunde him that is to be clensed, to wo lyuinge byrdes, which are cleane, and wodd, and purple woll, and ysope: and commaunde the one byrde to be kylled earthen vessell ouer sprynginge water. e shall take the lyuynge byrde with the wodd, the purple woll, and ysope, and them in the bloude of the slaine byrde the springynge water, and sprenkle it tymes vpon him that must be clensed y leprosy. And so clense him, and let lynge byrde flye at libertye in to the felde.

But he that is clensed, shal wash his clothes, and shaue of all his hayre, and bathe him self with water, so is he cleane. Afterwarde let him go in to the hoost, yet shall he tarye without his tent seuen dayes. And vpon the seuenth daye shal he shaue of all  $\frac{9}{5}$  hayre vpon his heade, vpō his beerde, vpon his browes, so that all the hayre be shauen of, and he shall wash his clothes and bathe his flesh in water, then is he cleane.

And vpō the eight daye shal he take two lambes without blemysh, and a shepe of a yeare olde without blemysh, and thre tenth deales of fyne floure for a meatofferynge, myngled with oyle,  $\mathfrak{g}$  a Logg of oyle. Thē shall the prest presente him that is clensed and these thinges before the LORDE, before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shal take  $\mathfrak{F}$  one lambe, and offre it for trespace offerynge, with the Logg of oyle,  $\mathfrak{g}$  shall waue them, before  $\mathfrak{F}$  LORDE, and afterwarde slave the lambe, where the synofferynge and burntofferynge are slayne, namely, in the holy place. For as the synofferynge, so is the trespace offerynge the prestes also, for it is most holy.

And the prest shall take of the bloude of C the trespace offerynge, and put it vpon the typpe of y right eare of him that is clesed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, and vpon the greate too of his right fote. Afterwarde shall he take of the oyle out of the Logg, and poure it in to his awne left hande, and dyppe his right fynger in the oyle that is in his left hande, and sprenkle the oyle with his fynger seuen tymes before the LORDE. As for the remnaunt of the oyle in his hande, he shall put it vpon the typpe of the right eare of him that is clensed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, g vpon the greate too of his right fote, euen aboue vpon the But the bloude of the trespace offerynge. remnaunt of the oyle in his hande, shall he poure vpon the heade of him that is clensed, and make an attonement for him before the And he shall make the syn-LORDE. offerynge, and reconcyle him that is clesed, because of his vnclennesse. And afterwarde shall he sleve the burntofferynge, and shal offre it vpon the altare with the meatofferynge, and make an attonement for him, g than is he cleane.

B But yf he be poore, and getteth not so moch with his hande, then let him take one lambe for a trespaceofferynge to waue it, to make an attonement for him, and a tenth deale of fyne floure myngled with oyle for a meatofferynge, and a Logg of oyle, g two turtyll doues, or two yonge pigeons which he is able to get with his hande, let the one be a synofferynge, the other a burntofferynge : and let him brynge them vpon the eight daye of his clensynge wnto the prest before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse before the LORDE.

Then shall the prest take the lambe for the synofferynge, and the Logg of oyle, and shall wave them all before the LORDE, and sley the lambe of the trespace offerynge: and take of  $\phi$  bloude of the same trespaceofferyngë, and put it vpon the typpe of the righte eare of him that is clensed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, and vpon the greate too of his righte fote, and poure of the oyle in to his awne lefte hande, and with his right fynger sprenkle the oyle that is in his left hande, seuen tymes before the LORDE.

As for the remnaunt of the oyle in his | IE hande, he shal put it vpon the typpe of the right eare of him that is clensed, and vpon the thombe of his right hande, a vpon the greate too of his right fote, euen aboue vpo $ bloude of y trespaceofferynge. The other oyle in his hāde shal he poure vpō y heade of him y is clensed, to make an attonement for him before the LORDE. And afterwarde of the one of the turtill doues or yonge pigeons (acordinge as his handes are able to get) he shal make a synofferynge, of y other a burntofferynge, with the meatofferynge: and so shal the prest make an attonemet for him that is cleased before the LORDE.

Let this be the lawe for the leper, which is not able with his hande to get, that belongeth vnto his clensynge.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, and sayde: Whan ye are come in to the lande of Canaan, which I geue you to possesse: and yf there happen a plage of leprosy in any house of youre possession, then shal he that owneth the house, come and tell the prest, and saye: Me thynke there is as it were a plage of leprosy in my house. Then shal the prest commaunde to rydde all thynge out of the house or euer the prest go in to se  $\hat{y}$  plage, lest all that is in the house be made vncleane. Afterwarde shall  $\hat{y}$  prest go in, to se the plage.

Now whan he loketh, and fyndeth, y there be holowe strakes yalowe or reedish in the walles of the house, a they seme to be lower then the wall besyde, then shall he go out at the dore of the house, and shut vp the house for seven dayes. And vpon the seventh daye whan he commeth, and seyth that the plage hath fretten farther in the walles of the house, the shall he commaunde to breake out the stones wherin the plage is,  $\mathfrak{g}$  to cast the in a foule place without the cite, a the house to be scraped within rounde aboute, and the dust \$ is scraped of, to be poured without y cite in an vneleane place, g to take other stones, and put them in the place of the other, and to take other playster, and playster the house.

Whan the plage then commeth agayne, and O breaketh forth in the house, after  $\mathring{v}$  the stones are broke out, the playster scraped of, and the house playsterd of the new, the shal the prest go in : and whan he seyth that the plage hath fretten farther in the house, then is there surely a fretinge leprosy in the house, and it is vncleane : therfore shal the house be broken downe, both the stones, and  $\hat{v}$  tymber and all the dust of the house, and shal be caried out of the cite in to an vncleane place. And who so goeth in to the house, whyle it is shut vp, is vncleane vntyll v euen. And he v lyeth therin, or eateth therin, shal wash his clothes.

But yf the prest se (whā he goeth in) that this plage hath frett no farther in the house, after that the house is new playsterd, the shal he judge it to be cleane, for the plage is healed. And to a synofferinge for the house, he shal take two byrdes, Ceder wodd, g purple woll, and ysope, and slaye the one byrde in an erthen vessell vpon sprynginge water, and shall take the Ceder wold, the purple woll, the ysope, and the lyuinge byrde, a dyppe them in the bloude of the slayne byrde vpon the sprynginge water, and sprenkle the house with all seuē tymes: and so shal he purifie the house with the bloude of the byrde, with the springingc water, with the lyuinge byrde, with the Ceder wodd, with the ysope, and with the purple woll. And the lyuynge byrde shall he let flye at libertye out of the towne in to the felde, a make an attonement for the house, and then is it cleane.

This is the lawe ouer all maner plage of leprosye a skyrfe, ouer y leprosye of clothes and of houses, ouer sores, scabbes, and glisterynge whyte, that it maye be knowne, whan eny thinge is vncleane or cleane. This is v lawe of leprosy.

ND y LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, g sayde: The childre of Israel shal pitch rounde aboute y Tabernacle of wytnesse, euery one vnder his banner g tokens, after their fathers houses.

On the East syde shall Iuda pitch with his banner a hoost, their captayne Nahasson the sonne of Aminadab. And his armie in the summe, foure a seventie thousande and sixe hundreth. Nexte vnto him shal the trybe of Isachar pitch, their captayne Nathaneel the sonne of Zuar: and his armye in the summe, foure and fiftye thousande and foure hundreth. The trybe of Zabulon also, their captayne Eliab the sonne of Helon: his armye in the summe, seuen and fiftie thousande and foure hundreth.

So y all they which beloge to y hoost of Iuda, be in the summe an C. sixe and foure score thousande, g foure hundreth be longinge to their armye, g they shall go before.

On the South side shall lye the pauvlions a 13 baner of Ruben with their hoost, their captaine Elizur y sonne of Sedeur: g his armie in the summe, sixe g fourtie thousande, g fyue C. Nexte vnto him shal the trybe of Simeon pitch, their captayne Selumiel y sonne of Zuri Sadai : 🐧 his armie in y summe, nyne and fiftie thousande, and thre hundreth. The trybe of Gad also, their captayne Eliasaph v sonne of Deguel: a his armye in the summe, fyue a fourtye thousande, sixe hundreth a fiftie. So that all they which belonge to the hoost of Ruben, be in the summe, an hundreth, one a fiftie thousande, foure hudreth and fiftye, belonginge to their armye. And they shall be the seconde in the iourney.

After that shall the Tabernacle of wytnesse C go with the hoost of the Leuites eue in § myddes amoge the hoostes: a s they lye in their tentes, so shal they go forth also, euery one in his place vnder his baner.

On the West syde shall lye 🕏 pauylions a baner of Ephraim with their hoost: their captayne shalbe Elisama sonne of Amihud, and his armye in the summe, fourtye thousande and fyue hundreth. Nexte vnto him shal y trybe of Manasse pitch, their captayne Gamaliel the sonne of Pedazur: his armye in the summe, two and thirtie thousande  $\mathfrak{a}$  two hūdreth. The trybe of Ben Iamin also, their captayne Abidan the sonne of Gedeoni: his armye in the summe, fyue and thirtie thousande  $\mathfrak{g}$  foure hundreth. So  $\mathfrak{f}$  all they which belonge to the hoost of Ephraim, be in the summe, an hundreth thousande, eight thousande, g an hūdreth, belonginge to his armie. So  $\mathfrak{f}$  all they which belonge to the hoost of Dan, be in the summe, an hūdreth thousande, seuen  $\mathfrak{g}$  fiftie thousande,  $\mathfrak{g}$  size hundreth. And they shalbe the last in the iourney with their baners.

This is the summe of the children of Israel, after their fathers houses and armyes with their hoostes: euen sixe hundreth thousande, g thre thousande, fyue hūdreth g fiftie. But ŷ Leuites were not nombred in ŷ summe amonge the childrē of Israel, * as ŷ LORDE cōmaunded Moses. And ŷ childrē of Israel dyd all as the LORDE cōmaunded Moses. And so they pitched vnder their baners, g toke their iourney, euery one in his kynred, acordinge to the house of their fathers.

The iij. Chapter.

A THESE are the generacions of Aaron g Moses, whan ŷ LORDE spake vnto Moses at ŷ same tyme vpon mount Sinai. And these are ŷ names of the sonnes of Aron. The firstborne, Nadab: then Abihu, Eleasar g Ithamar. These are ŷ names of the sonnes of Aaron, t which were anoynted to be prestes, g their handes fylled for ŷ presthode. <sup>b</sup>But Nadab g Abihu dyed before ŷ LORDE, whā they offred straūge fyre before ŷ LORDE, in ŷ wildernesse of Sinai, g had no sonnes. But Eleasar and Ithamar executed ŷ prestes office with their father Aaron.

'And the LORDE spake vnto Moses,  $\mathfrak{g}$ sayde: Bringe hither the trybe of Leui, and set them before Aaron the prest,  $\dot{\mathfrak{y}}$  they maye serue with him,  $\mathfrak{g}$  wayte vpon him  $\mathfrak{g}$  vpō the whole congregacion before  $\mathfrak{F}$  Tabernacle of witnesse, and execute the seruyce of the habitacion, and kepe all the apparell of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and wayte vpon the children of Israel, to mynistre in the seruyce of the habitacion.

And thou shalt geue  $\oint$  Leuites vnto Aaron and his sonnes for a gift, vnto euery one his awne, from amonge the children of Israel. As for Aaron g his sonnes, thou shalt appoynte them to wayte on their prestes office.  $\ddagger$  Yf another prease therto, he shal dye.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and

The iiij. Chapter.

ND the LORDE spake vnto Moses  $\mathfrak{g}$ Aaron,  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde: Take  $\mathfrak{f}$  summe of the childrē of Kahath from amonge the childrē of Leui, after their kynreds  $\mathfrak{g}$  fathers houses  $\mathfrak{t}$ from thirtie yeare and aboue vntill fiftye yeare, all that are mete for the warre, that they maye do the worke in the Tabernacle of witnesse. This shal be the office of the children of Kahath in the Tabernacle of wytnesse, which is most holy.

Whan the hoost breaketh vp, Aaron and his sonnes shall go in, and take downe the vayle, and couer the Arke of wytnesse therwith, and laye the couerynge of doo skynnes vpon it, and sprede a whole yalowe clothe aboue theron, and put his staues therin. And vpon the shewe table they shal sprede a yalowe clothe also, and set theron the disshes, spones, flatpeces and pottes to poure out and in, and the daylie bred shal lye vpon it, and they shall sprede a purple clothe therouer, and couer it with a couerynge of doo skynnes, and put the staues of it therin.

They shal swepe the asshes also from the altare, and sprede a clothe of scarlet ouer it, and set all his vessels theron, that they occupye vpon it: colepannes, fleshokes, shouels, basens, with all the apparell of the altare, and they shal sprede a couerynge of doo skynnes theron, and put his staues therto.

Now whan Aaron and his sonnes haue done this, and haue couered the Sanctuary g all the ornametes therof, whan the hoost breaketh vp, "then shal the children of Kahath go in, that they maye beare it, and the Sanctuary shall they not touche, " lest they dye. This is the charge of the children of Kahath in the Tabernacle of wytnesse.

C And Eleasar the sonne of Aaron  $\hat{\mathbf{y}}$  prest, shal have the office, to prepare the oyle for the light, and the spyces for the incense, and the daylie meat offerynge, and the anoyntinge oyle, to order the whole habitacion,  $\mathfrak{g}$  all that therin is, in the Sanctuary and the ornamentes therof.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses and Aaron, a sayde: Ye shal not destroye the trybe of the kynred of the Kahathites amoge the Leuites, but this shal ye do with them, y they maye lyue a not dye, yf they touche the most holy. Aaron and his sonnes shal go in, and appoynte euery one vnto his office g charge. But they shal not go in, presumptuously to loke vpo y Sanctuary, lest they die. And y children of Israel dyd so, and put them out of the hoost, as y LORDE had sayde vnto Moses.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel g saye vnto them: Whan a man or woman doth a synne to eny body, and offendeth therwith agaynst the LORDE, then hath that soule a trespace vpon it. + And they shall knowlege their synne, that they haue done, and shall make amendes for their trespace, euen with the whole summe, and put y fifth parte more therto, and geue it vnto him, agaynst whom they have trespaced. But yf there be noman to make the amendes vnto for the offence v he hath trespaced agaynst him, then shal the reconcylynge be made vnto the LORDE for the prest, besydes the ramme of the attonemet, wherwith he shalbe reconcyled.

33 Likewyse all the Heueofferynges of all that the children of Israel halowe vnto the LORDE, and offre vnto the prest, shall be his. And who so haloweth eny thinge, it shalbe his. And who so geueth the prest eny thinge, it shal be his also.

And the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: Whan eny mans wife goth asyde, and trespaceth agaynst him, g eny mā lye with her fleshlye, and the thinge be yet hyd from his eyes, and is not come to light that she is defiled, and he can brynge no witnesse agaynst her (for she was not take therin) and the sprete of gelousye kyndleth him, so that he is gelous ouer his wife: whether she be vncleane or not vncleane, then shal he brynge her vnto the prest, and brynge an offerynge for her, euen the tenth parte of an Epha of barlye meele, and shal poure no oyle theron, ner put frankensence vpon it : for it is an offerynge of gelousy, and an offeringe of remembraunce, that remembreth synne.

Then shall the prest brynge her, and sett C her before the LORDE, and take of the ‡ holy water in an earthen vessell, and put of $ dust that is on the floore of the habitacion, in to the water. And he shal set the wife before $ LORDE, and vncouer hir heade, and the offeringe of remembraunce which is an offeringe of gelousy, shall he laye vpon hir handes. And the prest shal haue in his hande bytter cursinge water, and shal coniure the wife, g saye vnto her: Yf no man haue lye with the, and thou hast not gone asyde from thy huszbande, to defyle thy self, then shall not these bytter cursinge waters hurte the. But yf thou hast gone asyde from thy huszbande, so that thou art defyled, and some other man hath lyen with the besyde thy huszbande, then shall the prest coniure the wife with this curse, and shal save vnto her: The LORDE sett the to a curse and a coniuracion amonge thy people, so that the LORDE make thy thye rotte, and thy wombe to berst. So go this cursed water in to thy body, that thy wombe berst, and thy thye rotte. And the wife shal saye: Amen Amen.

So the prest shall wryte this curse in a byll, and wash it out with the water, and shall geue the wife of the bytter cursinge waters to drynke. And whā the cursinge water is gone in her, so  $\frac{1}{2}$  it is bytter vnto her then shal the prest take the gelousy offerynge out of the wyues hande, and waue it for a meatofferynge before the LORDE, and offre it vpon the altare : namely, he shall take an handfull of the meatofferynge for hir remēbraunce, g burne it vpō the altare, g then geue the wife the water to drinke. And whā she hath dronken the water, yf she be defyled and haue trespaced agaynst hir huszbande, then shal the cursinge water go in to her, and be so bytter, that hir wombe shal berst, and hir thye shall rotte, and the wife shal be a curse amonge hir people. But yf the same wife be not defyled, but is cleane, then shall it do her no harme, so that she maye be with childe.

This is the lawe of gelousy, whan a wyfe goeth asyde from hir huszbande, and is defyled: Or whan  $\hat{y}$  sprete of gelousy kyndleth a man, so that he is gelous ouer his wyfe,  $\hat{y}$  he brynge her before the LORDE, and that  $\hat{y}$ prest do all with her acordinge vnto this lawe. And  $\hat{y}$  man shalbe giltlesse of the synne, but the wife shall beare hir myszdede.

The bi. Chapter.

ND the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake vnto the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: Whan a man or woman separateth them selues, to vowe a vowe of abstinence vnto the LORDE, he shal absteyne from wyne and ströge drynke. * Vyneger of wyne g of stronge drynke shal he not drynke, ner that is pressed out of grapes: he shall nether eate fresh ner drye grapes, so longe as his abstinence endureth. Morouer he shall eate nothinge that is made of the vyne tre, from the wyne cornels vnto the hulle.

As longe as the vowe of his abstynence endureth, there shall no rasoure come vpon his heade, tyll the tyme be out which he absteyneth vnto the LORDE, for he is holy.

And he shall let the heer of his heade growe, and stonde bare openly. All the tyme ouer  $\dot{y}$  he absteyneth vnto the LORDE, shal he go to no deed. Nether shal he defyle him self at  $\ddot{y}$  death of his father, of his mother, of his brother, or of his sister. For the abstinence of his God is vpon his heade, and  $\ddot{y}$  whole tyme of his abstinence shall he be holy vnto the LORDE.

33 And yf it chaunce eny man to dye sodenly before him, then shal y heade of his abstynence be defyled. Therfore shal he shaue his heade in the daye of his clensynge, that is vpon the seuenth daye: and vpon y eight daye shall he brynge two turtill doues, or two yonge pigeons, vnto the prest before  $\mathring{y}$ dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And the prest shall make the one a synofferynge, and the other a burntofferynge, and make an attonement for him, because he defyled him self vpon  $\mathring{y}$  deed, and so shal he halowe his heade the same daye, that he maye holde out the tyme of his abstinence vnto the LORDE, and he shall brynge a lambe of a yeare olde for a trespaceofferynge. But  $\mathring{y}$  daies afore shal be but lost, because his abstinence was defyled.

This is the lawe of the absteyner. Whan the tyme of his abstinence is out, he shal be brought before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse. And he shal brynge his offeringe vnto the LORDE, euen an he lambe of a yeare olde without blemysh for a burntofferinge,  $\mathfrak{g}$  a she lambe of a yeare olde without blemysh for a synofferynge, and a ramme with out blemish for an healthofferynge,  $\mathfrak{g}$  a maūde with vnleuended cakes of fyne floure myngled with oyle, and swete wafers anoynted with oyle,  $\mathfrak{g}$  their meatofferinges  $\mathfrak{g}$  drynkofferynges.

And the prest shall brynge it before the LORDE, and shal make his synofferynge and his burntofferynge, and  $\S$  ramme shal he make an healthofferynge vnto the LORDE, with \$ maunde of the vnleuended bred. His meatofferynge and drinkofferinge shal he make also. And he shall shaue the heade of the absteyners abstinence before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnesse, and shall take the heade heer of his abstinence, and cast it vpon the fyre that is vnder \$ healthofferynge.

And the sodden shulder of the ramme shall he take, and an vnleuended cake out of the maunde, and a swete wafer, and laye them vpon the handes of the absteyner: (after that he hath shauen of his abstinence.) And he shal Waue them before the LORDE. This is holy for the prest with the Waue brest, and Heue shulder. After that, maye the absteyner drynke wyne. This is the lawe of the absteyner, which voweth his offeringe vnto the LORDE for his abstynence, besydes that, which his hande can get. As he hath vowed, so shall he do acordinge to the lawe of his abstinence.

The r. Chapter.

A ND the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde: Make the two trompettes A of beaten syluer, that thou mayest vse them, to call the cogregacion together, and whan the hoost shal breake vp. Whan they blowe with both, then shall the whole congregacion gather them selues together vnto the before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnesse. Whan they blowe but with one, then the captaynes, the rulers ouer the thousandes in Israel shal gather them selues together vnto the. Whan ye trompe, then shal the hoostes that lye on the East syde, breake vp. And whan ye trompe the seconde tyme, the hoostes that lye on the South syde, shal breake vp. For ve shall trompe, whan they shal take their iourneys. *But whan y congregacion is to be gathered together, ye shal blowe, and not trompe. This blowinge with the trompettes shal the sonnes of Aaron the prest do. And it shall be youre lawe for euer amonge youre posterities.

Whan ye go to a battayll in youre londe agaynst youre enemies y vexe you, ye shall trompe with the trompettes, that ye maye be remembred before the LORDE youre God, and delyuered from youre enemies.

Like wyse whan ye are mery, and in youre 36 feast dayes, g in youre new Monethes, ye shal blowe with the trompettes ouer youre burnt-sacrifices a healthofferinges, y it maie be a remembraunce vnto you before youre God. I am the LORDE youre God.

Vpon the twentye daye in the seconde moneth of the seconde yeare, arose the cloude from the habitacion of witnesse. And the childre of Israel wente on their journey out of the wyldernesse of Sinai, "and the cloude abode in the wyldernesse of Paran, First brake vp (acordinge to the worde of the LORDE by Moses.) Namely, the baner of the hoost of Iuda wente forth first with their armies, 'and ouer their hoost was Nahasson the sonne And ouer the hoost of the of Aminadab. trybe of the children of Isachar was Nathaneel the sonne of Zuar. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Zabulon was Eliab the sonne of Elon. 'And the habitacion was taken downe, and the children of Gerson and Merari bare the habitacion.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of Ruben with their armies, and ouer their hoost was Elizur the sonne of Sedeur. And ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Simeon was Selumiel the sonne of Zuri Sadai. And Eliasaph the sonne of Deguel ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Gad. Then wente the Kahathites forwarde also, and bare the Sanctuary, and caused y habitacion be set vp agaynst they came.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of the children of Ephraim with their armies, and ouer their hoost was Elisama the sonne of Amihud. And Gamaliel the sonne of Pedazur ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Manasse. And Abidan the sonne of Gedeoni ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Ben Iamin.

After that wente the baner of the hoost of the children of Dan with their Armyes, (and so were all the hoostes vp) and Ahieser the sonne of Ammi Sadai was ouer their hoost. And Pagiel y sonne of Ochran, ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Asser. And Ahira the sonne of Enan ouer the hoost of the trybe of the children of Nephthali. Thus the childre of Israel wete forth with their armyes.

And Moses spake vnto his brother in lawe, 🛺 Hobab the sonne of Raguel of Madian: We go vnto the place, of the which y LORDE sayde : I wil geue it you : Come now with vs therfore, and we wil do y best with the, for the LORDE hath promysed good vnto Israel. But he answered: I wil not go with you, but wil go in to myne awne londe vnto my kynred. He sayde: Oh nay, leaue vs not: for thou knowest where is best for vs to pytche in the wyldernesse, and thou shalt be oure eye. And vf thou goest with vs, loke what good the LORDE doth vnto vs, the same wil we do So they departed from the mount vnto the.

And whan the sprete rested vpon them, they prophecied, and ceassed not.

- Æ But in the hoost there remayned yet two men, of whom the one was called Eldad, y other Medad, a the sprete rested vpo them. For they were wrytten vp also, a yet were they not gone out vnto the Tabernacle, and they prophecied in the hoost. Then ran there a lad, g tolde Moses, g sayde: Eldad and Medad prophecie in the hoost. Then answered Iosua y sonne of Nun Moses seruaunte (whom he had chosen) and sayde: My lorde Moses for bydde them. But Moses sayde vnto him: Art thou gelous for my sake? * wolde God, y all the people of y LORDE coulde prophecie, and that y LORDE wolde geue them his sprete. So Moses and the Elders of Israel gat them to the hoost.
- Then wente out the wynde from ŷ LORDE, "g caused quayles to come from the see, g scatred thē ouer the hoost, here a dayes iourney, there a dayes iourney rounde aboute ŷ hoost, two cubytes hye aboue ŷ earth. Then the people stode vp all that daye and all ŷ night, and all the nexte daye, and gathered quayles: and he that gathered the leest, gathered ten Homers, g they kylled them rounde aboute the hoost.

<sup>6</sup> But whyle  $\mathring{y}$  flesh was yet betwene their tethe,  $\mathfrak{q}$  or euer it was vp, the wrath of the LORDE waxed whote amonge the people, t and slewe them with an exceadinge greate slaughter. Therfore is the same place called the graues of lust, because the voluptuous people were buried there. From the lustgraues  $\circ$  toke the people their iourney vnto Hazeroth, and abode at Hazeroth.

A ND Miriam a Aaron spake agaynst <sup>a</sup> Moses because of his wife the Morian t which he had taken, because he had takē a Morian to wife, and they sayde : Doth the LORDE speake onely thorow Moses? Speaketh he not also by vs? And the LORDE herde it. § But Moses was a very meke man, aboue all men vpon earth. And haistely spake the LORDE vnto Moses, and to Aaron, and to Miriam : Go out ye thre vnto <sup>e</sup> Then came the LORDE downe in the cloudy piler,  $\mathfrak{g}$  stode in the dore of the Tabernacle,  $\mathfrak{g}$  called Aaron  $\mathfrak{g}$  Miriam,  $\mathfrak{g}$  they both wete out. And he sayde : Heare my wordes : Yf eny man be a prophet of the LORDE, vnto him wil I shewe my self in a vision, or wil speake vnto him in a dreame. But not so with my seruaunt Moses, f which is faithfull in all my house.  $\parallel$  Mouth to mouth speake I vnto him,  $\mathfrak{g}$  he seyth the LORDE in his fashion, not thorow darke wordes or licknesses: Wherfore were ye not afrayed then to speake agaynst my seruaunt Moses?

And  $\hat{y}$  wrath of the LORDE waxed whote ouer them,  $\mathfrak{g}$  he turned him awaye, and  $\hat{y}$ cloude also departed from the Tabernacle. <sup>6</sup> And beholde, then was Miriam become leporus, as it were snowe. And Aaron turned him vnto Miriam, and sawe that she was leporous, and sayde vnto Moses: Oh my lorde, put not the synne vpon vs, which we haue foolishly committed and synned, that she be not as one that commeth deed out of his mothers wombe : It hath eaten vp half hir flesh allready.

But Moses cried vnto the LORDE,  $\alpha$ sayde: Oh God, heale her. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Yf hir father had spytte in hir face, shulde she not be ashamed seuen dayes? ¶ Let her be shut out of \$ hoost seuē dayes, after ἱ let her be receaued agayne. Now whan Moses sent the forth to spye 勘 out the lande of Canaan, he sayde vnto the : Go vp southwarde, and get you vp to the mountaynes, and loke upon the londe how it is: and the people that dwell therin, whether they be stronge or weake, fewe or many: and what maner of lande it is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad: a what maner of cities they be that they dwell in, whether they be fenced with walles, or not: and what maner of lande it is, whether it be fatt or leane, and whether there be trees therin, or not. Be of a good corage, and bringe of the frutes of the londe. It was even aboute the tyme, that grapes are first rype.

They wente vp,  $\alpha$  spyed the lande, from  $\psi$ wildernes of Zin, vntyll Rehob, as mē go vnto Hemath. They wente vp also towarde the south, and came vnto Hebron, where Ahiman was, and Sesai and Thalmai, the children of Enack (Hebron was buylded seuen yeare before Zoan in Egipte.)

C And they came to the ryuer of Escol, and "there they cut downe a cluster of grapes, and caused two to beare it vpon a staffe, pomgranates also and fygges. The place is called the ryuer of Escol, because of the cluster of grapes, which the children of Israel cut downe there.

And whan they had spyed out the lande, they turned bake againe after fourtye daies, and wente, and came to Moses and Aaron, a to the whole congregacion of y children of Israel in to § wyldernesse of Paran, euc vnto

And we sawe the children of Enack there also. The Amalechites dwell in the south countre, the Hethites, and Iebusites and Amorites dwell vpon the mountaynes, but the Cananites dwell by the see, and aboute Iordane.

Howbeit Caleb stylled y people that was agaynst Moses, and sayde vnto them : Let vs go vp, and conquere the lande, for we are able to ouercome it. But the men that wente vp with him, sayde: 'We are not able to go vp agaynst that people, for they are to stronge for vs. And of the lande that they had searched, they brought vp an euell reporte amonge the childre of Israel, and saide : The lade that we have gone thorow to spye out, eateth vp the indwellers therof: and all the people that we sawe therin, are men of greate stature. #### The rb. Chapter

A ND the LORDE talked with Moses, and sayde: Speake to the childrē of Israel, q saye vnto them: Whan ye come in to the lande of youre dwellinge, which I shal geue you, and wil do sacrifice vnto the LORDE, whether it be a burntofferynge, or an offrynge for a speciall vowe, or a frewyll offerynge, or youre feast offerynges, that ye maye make a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE, of oxen or of shepe.

<sup>b</sup>He ý wil offre now his gifte vnto ý LORDE, shal brynge for the meatofferinge a tēth deale of fyne floure myngled with oyle of the fourth parte of an Hin, and wyne for ý drynkofferynge the fourth part of an Hin also: to the burntofferinge, or eny other offeringe, whan a lambe is offred. But whā there is a ramme offred, thou shalt make the meatofferynge two tēth deales of fyne floure myngled with oyle, of the thirde parte of an Hin, and ý thirde parte of an Hin of wyne also for a drynkofferinge: this shalt thou offre for a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE.

* Deut. 1. f. * Leuit. 2, a, and 6, b. < Exo. 23. c

But yf thou wilt offre an oxe for a burntofferynge, or for a speciall vowe offerynge, or for an healthofferinge vnto the LORDE, thou shalt brynge to the oxe, the meatoffrynge, euen thre tenth deales of fyne floure mingled with half an Hin of oyle,  $\mathfrak{g}$  half an Hin of wyne for a drynkoffrynge. This is an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE. Thus shalt thou do with an oxe, with a ramme, with a lambe, and with a goate. Acordinge as the nombre of the offerynges is, therafter shall the nombre of the meatofferynges and drynkofferynges be also.

He that is one of youre selues, shall do this, that he maye offre a sacrifice of a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE. And yf there dwoll a straunger with you, or is amoge youre kynszfolkes, and wil do an offerynge vnto the LORDE for a swete sauoure, the same shal do as ye do. Let there be one statute for the whole corregacion, both vnto you and to the straungers. A perpetuall statute shal it be vnto youre posterities, that the straunger be euē as ye before § LORDE. One lawe, and one ordinaunce shalbe vnto you and to the straunger that dwelleth with you.

And the LORDE talked with Moses,  $\mathfrak{g}$ sayde: Speake to the children of Israel, and saye vnto them: Whan ye come in to the lande, in to  $\mathfrak{F}$  which I shal brynge you, 'so that ye eate the bred of the londe, ye shal heue vp an Heueofferynge vnto the LORDE, namely, a cake of the firstlinges of youre dowe shall ye geue for an Heueofferynge:\* as the Heueofferynge of the barne, euen so shal ye geue the firstlinges of youre dowe also vnto the LORDE, for an Heueofferynge amonge youre posterities.

And whan ye thorow ignoraunce ouer se eny of these commaundementes, "which the LORDE hath spoken by Moses, and all y' the LORDE hath commaunded you by Moses (from the daye that the LORDE beganne to commaunde for youre posterities) and the corregacion do ought ignorauntly, the shal the whole congregacion offre a yonge bullocke from amonge the greate catell to a burntofferynge, for a swete sauoure vnto the LORDE, with his meatofferynge and drynkofferynge as the maner is, and an hegoate for a synofferynge. And so shal the prest make an attonement for the whole congregacion of the children of Israel, and it shalbe forgeuen them: for it is an ignoraunce. And they shal brynge these their giftes for an offerynge vuto the LORDE, and their synofferynge before the LORDE for their ignoraunce, and it shalbe forgeuen the whole congregacion of the childrē of Israel, a the straunger also y dwelleth amonge you, for so moch as all the people is in soch ignoraunce.

Deut. 8. c. * Leui. 23. b. 4 Leui. 4. c.

Yf one soule synne thorow ignoraunce,<sup>a</sup> the same shal brynge a she goate of a yeare olde for a synofferynge. And the prest shall make an attonement for soch an ignoraunt soule with the synofferinge for the ignoraunce before the LORDE, that he maye reconcyle him, and it shal be forgouen him. And it shal be one lawe, (that ye shal do for  $\S$  ignoraunce) both vnto him that is borne amonge the children of Israel, and to the straunger that dwelleth amonge you.

Now whyle the children of Israel were in the wyldernesse, they founde a man gatherynge stickes vpon the Sabbath daye. And they that founde him gatherynge stickes, brought him vnto Moses and Aaron, and before the whole congregacion. *And they put him in preson, for it was not declared what shulde be done vnto him. The LORDE sayde vnto Moses: The man shall dye the death, the whole congregacion shal stone him without the hoost. Then the whole cogregacion brought him out of § hoost, and stoned him that he dyed. as y LORDE commaunded Moses.

And  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE sayde vnto Moses: Speake to the childrē of Israel,  $\mathfrak{q}$  saye vnto thē, ' $\mathring{y}$ they make them gardes vpon  $\mathring{y}$  quarters of their garmentes amonge all youre posterities, and put yalowe rybandes vpon the gardes in  $\mathring{y}$ quarters. And  $\mathring{y}$  gardes shal serue you,  $\mathring{y}$  ye maye loke vpon thē, and remembre all the cōmaundementes of the LORDE,  $\mathfrak{q}$  do them: that ye order not youre selues after  $\mathring{y}$  meanynge of youre awne hert, ner go a whorynge

I haue not take so moch as an Asse frö the, nether haue I hurte eny of the. And Moses sayde vnto Corah: Tomorow be thou  $\mathfrak{g}$  all thy companye before  $\mathfrak{F}$  LORDE, thou, and they,  $\mathfrak{g}$  Anron. And take euery one his censer, and put incense therin, and come before the LORDE, euery one with his censer (that is two hundreth and fiftye censers) and both thou and Aaron take either his censer.

And every one toke his censer, and put fyre therin, and layed incense theron, and came before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnes, and Moses and Aaron also. And Corah gathered § whole congregaciō agaynst the before the dore of the Tabernacle of witnes.

But  $\S$  glory of the LORDE appeared before  $\S$  whole congregacion. And  $\S$  LORDE spake vnto Moses  $\mathfrak{q}$  Aaron,  $\mathfrak{q}$  sayde : Separate youre selues frō this congregaciō,  $\S$  I maye shortly consume them. And they fell vpon their faces,  $\mathfrak{q}$  sayde : O God, thou God of the spretes of all flesh, yf one man haue synned, wilt thou therfore be wroth ouer the whole congregacion? And the LORDE spake vnto Moses,  $\mathfrak{q}$  saide : Speake to the congregaciō, and saye : Come vp from  $\mathring{\mathfrak{g}}$  dwellynge of Corah, and Dathan, and Abiram.

And Moses stode vp, g wente vnto Dathan g Abiram, g the Elders of Israel folowed him, g he spake to ŷ cōgregaciō, g saide: Departe frō ŷ tentes of these vngodly mē g touche nothinge ŷ is theirs, ŷ ye perishe not in eny of their sinnes. And they gat them vp from the dwellynge of Corah, Dathan, g Abiram. But Dathan and Abirā came out, and stode in the dore of their tentes, with their wyues, and sonnes and children.

And Moses sayde: Hereby shal ye knowe that the LORDE hath sent me, to do all these workes, and that I haue not done them of myne awne hert. Yf these men dye the comon death of all men, or be vysited as all men are vysited, then hath not the LORDE went me. But yf the LORDE make a new thinge, and the earth open hir mouth, and swalowe them with all that they haue, so y they go downe quycke in to hell, the shal ye knowe, that these men haue blasphemed the LORDE.

And whā he had spokē out all these wordes,  $\mathfrak{X}$   $\mathfrak{Y}$  groūde cloue asunder vnder thē,  $\mathfrak{G}$  the earth opened hir mouth,  $\mathfrak{G}$  swalowed thē, with their houses,  $\mathfrak{G}$  all the mē  $\mathfrak{Y}$  were with Corah,  $\mathfrak{G}$  all their substaūce, and they wente downe quycke in to the hell, with all that they had.

And the earth closed vpō them,  $\mathfrak{q}$  so they perished from amonge  $\mathfrak{F}$  congregaciō. And all Israel  $\mathfrak{F}$  were aboute thē, fled at  $\mathfrak{F}$  crye of thē, for they sayde: That  $\mathfrak{F}$  earth swalowe not vs also. Morouer the fyre came out frō the LORDE, and consumed the two hundreth and fyftye men, that offred the incense.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses,  $\mathfrak{g}$ sayde: Speake to Eleasar  $\mathfrak{F}$  sonne of Aaron  $\mathfrak{F}$ prest,  $\mathfrak{F}$  he take vp  $\mathfrak{F}$  censers out of  $\mathfrak{F}$  burninge,  $\mathfrak{g}$  scater  $\mathfrak{F}$  fyre here  $\mathfrak{g}$  there (For the censers of these synners are halowed thorow their soules)  $\mathfrak{F}$  they maye be beate in to thinne plates,  $\mathfrak{g}$  fastened vpon  $\mathfrak{F}$  altare. For they are offred before  $\mathfrak{F}$  LORDE,  $\mathfrak{g}$  halowed: and they shalbe a token vnto  $\mathfrak{F}$  childre of Israel.

ND § LORDE spake vnto Moses, a a sayde : Speake to the children of Israel, a take of the twolue staues, of euery captayne of his fathers house one, and wryte euery mans name vpon his staffe. But Aarons name shalt thou wryte vpon the staffe of Leui. For euery heade of their fathers house shal haue a staffe. And laye the in the Tabernacle of witnesse, before the witnesse where I testifie vnto you. And loke whom I shall chose, his staffe shal florishe, v I may stylle the grudginges of the children of Israel, which they grudge agaynst you.

And Moses spake vnto the childre of Israel, a all their captaynes gaue him twolue staues, euery captayne a staffe, after y house of their fathers. And Aarons staffe was amonge their staues also. And Moses layed the staues before the LORDE in the Tabernacle of witnesse.

On the morow wha Moses wete in to § 33 Tabernacle of witnesse, he founde v + Aaros rodde of the house of Leui florished, and brought forth blossoms, g bare allmondes. And Moses brought forth all v staues fro v LORDE before all y childre of Israel, that they might se it. And they toke euery mā his staffe.

The LORDE sayde vnto Moses : Bringe Aaros staffe againe before the wytnesse, y it maye be kepte for a toke to the children of rebellion, that their murmuringes maye ceasse fro me, lest they dye.

Moses dyd as y LORDE comaunded him. And y childrē of Israel sayde vnto Moses: Beholde, we cosume awaie, we are destroied, a perishe. Who so cometh nye y dwellynge place of § LORDE, he dyeth. Shal we the vtterly cosume awaie?

But thy brethren of the trybe of Leui thy father, shal come nye the, a be ioyned vnto the, that they may emynistre vnto y. But thou a thy sonnes with the, shal mynistre before y Tabernacle of witnesse. And they shal wayte vpo thy seruyce g vpon ŷ seruyce of the whole Tabernacle. And there shal no straunger come nye vnto you.

Therfore wayte now vpon the seruyce of the Sanctuary, and vpon the seruyce of the altare, that there come no more wrath vpon the children of Israel. For lo, I haue take youre brethre the Leuites fro amonge the children of Israel, to be youre gifte, for a presente vnto v LORDE, to do v seruyce in y Tabernacle of witnes. Yf a straunger come nye, he shall dye.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Aaron: beholde, I haue geuen the my Heueofferynges : And all that the children of Israel halowe, haue I geuen vnto the, and to thy sonnes for a perpetuall dewtye. This shalt thou have of the most holy thinges that they offer. therof. All the fat of the oyle, and all  $\hat{y}$  fat of the wyne and corne of their firstlinges, that they geue vnto the LORDE, haue I geuen vnto  $\hat{y}$ . The first frutes of all that is in their londe, which they bringe vnto the LORDE, shal be thine. Who so euer is cleane in thine house, shal eate therof.

All dedicate thinges in Israel shal be thine. All that breaketh the Matrix amonge all flesh, which they brynge vnto the LORDE, whether it be man or beest, shalbe thine. But so, that thou cause the firstborne of mā to be redemed, and that thou cause the first borne of vncleane beestes to be redemed also (They shal redeme it whan it is a moneth olde, and shall gene it lowse for money, euen for fyue Sycles, after the Sycle of the Sanctuary, • which Sycle is worth twentye Geras.)

But the first frutes of an oxe, or lambe, or goate shalt thou not cause to be redemed for they are holy. Their bloude shalt thou sprenkle vpon the altare, and their fat shalt thou burne for an offerynge of a swete sauoure vnto  $\hat{y}$  LORDE. And the LORDE sayde vnto Aaro: Thou shalt inheret nothinge in their londe," ner haue eny porcio amonge them : for I am thy porcion, and thine enheritaunce amoge the children of Israel. Vnto the children of Leui haue I geuen all the tithes in Israel to inheritaunce, for y seruyce which they do vnto me in the Tabernacle of witnesse, that from hece forth the children of Israel come not nye the Tabernacle of witnes, to lade them selues with synne, and to dye: But the Leuites shal do the seruyce in the Tabernacle of witnes, g shal beare their synne, for a perpetuall lawe amonge youre posterities. + And they shall inheret none inheritaunce amonge the children of Isruel. For y tithes of the childre of Israel, which they Heue vnto § LORDE, haue I geuen vuto the Leuites for an heretage. And the same youre Heueofferynge shall ye reken, as though ye gaue corne out of the barne, and fullnesse out of the wynepresse.

Thus shal ye geue an Heueofferynge vnto E the LORDE of all youre tithes, which ye take of the children of Israel, y ye maie geue the same Heueofferynge of y LORDE, vnto Aaro y prest. And all y ye geue of y tythes, g halowe vnto y LORDE for a gifte, y same shall be his of the best. And saye thou vnto them: Whan ye thus Heue vp y fat therof, it shal be rekened vnto the Leuites as the increace of the barne, and as the increace of the wine presse. And ye maye eate it in all places, ye g youre children: for it is youre rewarde for youre seruyce in the Tabernacle of witnesse: and ye shal not lade synne vpon you in the same, whan ye Heue the fat therof, and vnhalowe not the halowed thinges of the children of Israel, and ye shal not dye.

And the children of Israel departed, and pitched in Oboth. And from Oboth they wente on, and pitched in Igim by Abarim in the wyldernesse ouer agaynst Moab, on the From thence departed they, a Eastsyde. pitched by the ryuer of Sared. From thence departed they, and pitched on this syde Arnon, which is in the wyldernesse, and commeth out of the coastes of the Amorites. For Arnon is the border betwixte Moab and $ C Amorites. Wherfore it is spoken in the boke of the warres of the LORDE: And go with violence both on the ryuer of Arnon, t on the founteyne of the river, which boweth downewarde to dwell at Ar, g leaneth theron, to be the border of Moab.

And from thence they came to the well. This is the well, wherof the LORDE spake vnto Moses: gather the people together, I wil geue them water. Then sange Israel this songe, and they sange one after another ouer the well: This is the well, that the prynces dygged: the nobles amonge the people haue digged it thorow  $\hat{y}$  teacher and their staues.

And from this wildernes they wente vnto Mathana,  $\alpha$  from Mathana vnto Nahaliel, and from Nahaliel to Bamoth, and frō Bamoth vnto the valley that lieth in  $\mathring{y}$  felde of Moab at the toppe of Pisga, and turneth towarde the wyldernesse.

And Israel sent messaungers vnto Sihō the kynge of the Amorrites,  $\mathfrak{q}$  caused to saye vnto him: Let me go thorow thy lande, we wyl not turne in to  $\mathfrak{f}$  feldes ner in to the vynyardes: nether will we drynke the water of the welles,  $\mathfrak{f}$  hye strete wil we go, till we be past the borders of thy countre.

Howbeit Sihon wolde not geue the children 玬 of Israel licence to go thorow the coastes of his londe, but gathered all his people together, and wente out agaynst Israel in the wyldernesse. And whan he came to Iaheza, he fought agaynst Israel. Neuerthelesse Israel smote him with the edge of the swerde, and conquered his lande from Arnon vnto Iabock, and vnto the children of Ammon. For the borders of the children of Ammon were ströge. So Israel toke all these cities, and dwelt in all the cities of § Amorites, namely at Heszbon, and in the townes belonginge therto. For Heszbon the cite was Sihons the kynge of the Amorites, and he had foughten before with the kynge of the Moabites, and conquered all his londe from him vntyll Arnon.

Wherfore it is sayde in the prouerbe: Come vnto Heszbon, let vs buylde and prepare  $\hat{y}$ cite of Sihon. For there is a fyre gone out of Heszbon, and a flamme from the cite of Sihon, which hath consumed Ar of  $\hat{y}$  Moabites, and the citisens of  $\hat{y}$  toppe of Arnon. Wo vnto the Moab, thou people of Camos art vndone. His sonnes are put to flighte, g his doughters brought captyue vnto Sihon the kynge of the Amorites. Their glory is come to naught from Heszbon vnto Dibon : waisted are they vnto Nopha, which reacheth vnto Mediba. Thus dwelt Israel in the lande of the Amorites.

And Moses sent out spyes vnto Iahesar, a they toke the townes belongynge therto, a coquered the Amorites y were therin. And they turned, 'a wente vp the waye towarde Basan. Then Og the kynge of Basan wete out agaynst them with all his people, to fight in Edrei. And y LORDE sayde vnto Moses : Feare him not, for I have geven him with his lande a people in to thy hande, a thou shalt do with him, as thou dyddest with Sihon the kynge of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heszbon. And they smote him, a his sonnes, a all his people (so y there remayned none) a coquered the londe. Afterwarde wete y children of Israel, g pitched in y felde of Moab beyonde Iordane by Iericho.

And the Elders of the Moabites wente on with § Elders of the Madianites, and had the rewarde of § soyth sayenge in their handes, and they came vnto Balaam, g tolde him the wordes of Balaac. And he saide vnto thē: Tary here all night, g I will bringe you worde agayne, cuen as the LORDE shal saye vnto me. So § prynces of § Moabites abode with Balaam.

And God came vnto Balaam,  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde: What men are these, which are with  $\mathfrak{F}$ ? Balaam sayde vnto God: Balac  $\mathfrak{F}$  sonne of Ziphor the kynge of the Moabites hath sent vnto me: Beholde, there is a people come out of Egipte, and couereth the face of the earth, come now therfore,  $\mathfrak{T}$  curse me the, yf peraducture I maye be able to fighte with them,  $\mathfrak{g}$  to dryue the out. But God sayde vnto Balaam: Go not with them,  $\mathfrak{g}$  curse not that people, for they are blessed.

Then rose Balaam vp in the mornynge, g sayde vnto the prynces of Balac: Get you vnto youre londe, for the LORDE wyll not suffer me to go with you.

And the prynces of § Moabites gat the vp, came to Balac, g saide: Balaam refuseth to come with vs. Then sent Balac yet a greater copany of prynces, g more honorable the they. Whan they came to Balaam, they tolde him: Balac § sonne of Ziphor sendeth § this worde: Oh refuse not to come vnto me, for I wyll promote the vnto hye honoure, g wil do what so euer thou sayest vnto me. Come I praye the, curse me this people.

Balaam answered,  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde vnto  $\mathfrak{f}$  serua $\overline{u}$ tes of Balac: \*Yf Balac wolde geue me his house full of syluer  $\mathfrak{g}$  golde, yet coulde I not go beyonde  $\mathfrak{f}$  worde of the LORDE my God, to do litle or greate. Neuertheles tary ye here this night,  $\mathfrak{f}$  I maye wete, what the LORDE with saye more vnto me. Then came God to Balaam by night,  $\mathfrak{g}$  saide vnto him: Yf the mere are come to call the, get the vp then, and go with the is but what I shal saye vnto the, that shalt thou do.

Then rose Balaam vp in the mornynge, a • Nu. 24. c sadled his Asse,  $\mathfrak{g}$  wente with the prynces of  $\hat{\mathfrak{f}}$ Moabites. But the wrath of God waxed whote, because he wëte. And all the golde of the Heueofferynge that they Heued vnto the LORDE, was sixtene thouwande and seuen hundreth and fyftye Sycles, of the captaynes ouer thousandes and hundreds. For loke what euery one had spoyled, that was his awne. And Moses with Eleasar the prest toke the golde of the captaynes ouer thousandes and hundreds, and broughte it in to the Tabernacle of witnesse for a remembraunce of the children of Israel before the LORDE.

The rrrij. Chapter.

THE children of Ruben and the children 9 of Gad had an exceadinge greate multitude of catell, and sawe the londe of Iaeser and Gilead y it was a mete place for catell, and came g spake vnto Moses and to Eleasar the prest, and to the captaynes of the congregacion: The londe of Atroth, Dibon, Iaesar, Nimra, Heszbö, Eleale, Seban, Nebo, g Beon, which the LORDE smote before § congregacion of Israel, is a mete londe for catell, and thy seruauntes haue many catell. And they sayde morouer: Yf we have founde fauoure before the, the geue thy seruauntes this londe in possession, and we wyl not go ouer Iordane.

Moses sayde vnto them: Youre brethren shall go to the warre, and wyll ye tary here? Wherfore turne ye  $\hat{y}$  hertes of the children of Israel, that they shulde not go ouer in to the bonde that the LORDE shall geue them? Thus dyd youre fathers also, whan I sent them out from Cades Bernea, to spye out ŷ loude. And whan they were come vp to ŷ ryuer of Escol, and sawe ŷ londe, they turned the hertes of the children of Israel, so  $\mathring{y}$  they wolde not in to the londe which  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE wolde haue geuen them.

And the LORDE was wroth at the same tyme, g sware, g sayde: "These men y are come out of Egipte, from twëtye yeare olde g aboue, shall not se the lande which I sware vnto Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, because they haue not wholy folowed me: saue Caleb y sonne of Iephune y Kenisite, g Iosua y sonne of Nun: for they haue wholy folowed y LORDE. So the LORDE was wroth with Israel, g let thë wander in the wildernesse fourtye yeares, tyll all y generacion y had done euell before the LORDE, was consumed.

And beholde, ye are rysen vp in youre  $\mathbb{C}$  fathers steade, to increase the nombre of synfull men,  $\mathfrak{q}$  to augmente yet the wrath  $\mathfrak{q}$  indignacion of the LORDE agaynst Israel. For yf ye turne you backe from folowinge him, he shal yet leaue them more in the wildernes,  $\mathfrak{q}$  so shal ye destroye all this people.

Then stepte they to him,  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde : we wyll but buylde shepefoldes here for oure shepe  $\mathfrak{g}$ catell,  $\mathfrak{g}$  cities for oure children : As for oure selues, we will go ready armed before the children of Israel, tyll we have broughte them vnto their place : Oure childrē shal remayne in the fenced cities, because of  $\mathfrak{f}$  indwellers of the londe. We will not turne home agayne, tyll the children of Israel haue taken euery one his inheritaunce in possession : for we wyll not inheret with them beyonde Iordane : for oure inheritaunce shal fall vnto vs vpon this syde Iordane Eastwarde.

Moses sayde vnto them: \*Yf ye wil do this, B that ye wil harnesse youre selues to the warre before the LORDE, then go ouer lordane before the LORDE, who so euer is harnessed amonge you, tyll he haue dryuen out his enemies before his face, and vntyll the londe be subdued before the LORDE, then shal ye returne, g be vngiltye before the LORDE, and before Israel,  $\tau$  so shal ye have this londe in possession before the LORDE. But yf ye will not do so, beholde, ye shal offende agaynst the LORDE, and be sure, that youre synne shal fynde you out. Buylde cities now therfore for youre children, and shepefoldes and stalles for youre shepe and catell, and do as ve haue spoken.

And Moses commaunded the children of Israel, and sayde: This is youre londe that ve shal deuyde out amonge you by lott, which the LORDE hath commaunded to geue vnto the nyne trybes, and to the halfe trybe. *For the trybe of the children of Ruben after their fathers house, and the trybe of the children of Gad acordinge to their fathers house, and the half trybe of Manasse haue receaued their porcion. Thus the two trybes and the halfe trybe haue their enheritaunce allready, on this syde Iordane, ouer agaynst Iericho, Eastwarde.

And the LORDE spake vnto Moses, and sayde : "These are  $\hat{y}$  names of the men, which shal deuyde the londe amonge you. Eleasar the prest, and Iosua the sonne of Nun. And the captayne of euery trybe shal ye take, to deuvde the londe.

And these are the names of the men: Ð Caleb the sonne of Iephune of the trybe of Semuel the sonne of Ammihud of the Iuda. trybe of Simeon. Elidad y sonne of Cislon of the trybe of Ben Iamin. Buki the sonne of Iagli of the trybe of the childre of Dan. Hamuel the sonne of Ephod, of the trybe of the children of Manasse amonge the children of Ioseph. Kemuel the sonne of Siphthan, of the trybe of the children of Ephraim. Elizaphan the sonne of Parnach, of the trybe of the childre of Zabulon. Palthiel the sonne of Asan, of the trybe of the childre of Isachar. Abihud the sonne of Selomi, of y trybe of the children of Asser. Pedahel the sonne of Ammihud, of the trybe of the children of Nephtali. These are they whom y LORDE commaunded, that they shulde deuyde the inheritaunce vnto the children of Israel in the londe of Canaan.

taynes amonge the chefe fathers of the children of Israel, and saide : Syr, the LORDE hath +commaunded, that ye shulde geue the londe by lott vnto the childre of Israel to inheret. And thou my lorde hast commaunded thorow the LORDE, 'that the enheritaunce of oure brother Zelaphead shulde be geue vnto his doughters. Now yf eny men out of the trybes 33 of Israel take them to wyues, then shal oure fathers enheritaunce be lesse : and as moch as they haue, shal come to y enheritaunce of the trybe that they come vnto. Thus shal the lott of oure inheritaunce be mynished. So whan the yeare of Iubilye commeth vnto the childre of Israel, then shal their enheritaunce come to § enheritaunce of the trybe, where they are. Thus shal oure fathers enheritaunce be mynished, as moch as they haue.

Moses charged the childre of Israel (acordinge to the commaundement of the LORDE) and sayde: The trybe of the children of Ioseph hath sayde righte. This is it that § LORDE commaundeth the doughters of Zelaphead, and sayeth: ‡ Let them mary as they like best, onely that they mary in § kynred of the trybe of their father, that the enheritaunce of the children of Israel fall not fro one trybe to another. For euery one amonge the children of Israel shall cleue to the enheritaunce of the trybe of his father: a euery doughter that possesseth eny enheritaunce amonge the trybes of the children of Israel, shal be maryed vnto one of the kynred of the trybe of hir father: 'y euery one amonge the children of Israel maye enioye his fathers enheritaunce, and that the enheritaunce fall not from one trybe to another: but that euery one maye cleue to his awne enheritaunce 🛺 amonge the trybes of the children of Israel.

The first Chapter.

THESE are the wordes that Moses spake A 1 vnto all Israel on the other syde Iordane in the wildernesse, in the playne felde towarde the reed see, betwene Paran, Thophel, Laban, Hazeroth, and Disahab, eleuen daies iourney from Horeb, by the waye of mount Seir vnto Cades Bernea. And it fortuned the first dave of the eleuenth moneth in the fortieth yeare, that Moses spake vnto y children of Israel acordinge vnto all as y LORDE commaunded him, *after he had smytten Sihon y kynge of the Amorites which dwelt at Heszbon: and Og the kynge of Basan, that dwelt at Astaroth, and at Edrei.

On the other syde Iordane in § lande of the Moabites, beganne Moses to declare this lawe, and sayde: The LORDE oure God spake vnto vs vpon mount Horeb, g sayde: Ye have bene loge ynough vpon this mountayne, turne you, a departe hence, that ye maye come to the mountaynes of the Amorites, and to all their neghbours in y feldes, vpon mountaynes, and in the valleys towarde the South and towarde the see syde, of the lande of Canaan: and to mount Libanus, euen vnto the greate water Euphrates. Beholde, I haue delyuered you the londe, go in, and take it in possession, which the LORDE sware vnto youre fathers, Abraham, Isaac and lacob,† that he wolde geue it vnto the, and their sede after them.

Then saide I vnto you at the same tyme : "I am not able to beare you my self alone, for the LORDE youre God hath increased you, so that this daye ye are as y starres of heauen in multitude. (The LORDE God of youre fathers make you yet many thousande tymes mo,  $\sigma$  blesse you, as he hath promysed you.) How can I alone beare soche cobraunce, a charge, a stryfe amoge you? Prouyde here men of wyszdome g vnderstondinge, soch as are knowne amonge youre trybes, the wil I set to be heades vnto you.

Then answered ye me, and sayde: It is a good thinge, that thou sayest thou wilt do. Then toke I y heades of youre trybes, wyse and famous me, and set them ouer you to be heades, ouer thousandes, ouer hundreds, ouer fiftye and ouer ten: and officers amonge youre trybes.

And I charged youre judges at y same tyme, a sayde: Heare youre brethre, a tiudge righteously betwene euery man and his brother, and the straunger. Ye shall knowe no personne in judgment, but shall heare the small as well as the greate, and be afrayed of no man : for the Iudgment is Gods. But yf eny cause be to harde for you, 'let it be broughte vnto me, y I maye heare it. Thus commaunded I you at the same tyme, all v ye shulde doo.

Then departed we from Horeb, and walked thorow the whole wyldernesse (which is greate and terryble as ye haue sene) by the waye to y mountaynes of the Amorites, as the LORDE oure God commanded vs, and came vnto Cades Bernea. Then sayde I vnto you: Ye are come to y mountaynes of y Amorites, which the LORDE oure God shal geue vs. Beholde, there the londe before the, which the LORDE thy God hath geue vnto the: Go vp, g conquere it, as y LORDE God of thy fathers hath sayde vnto the : § feare not, and be not discoraged.

Then came ye all vnto me, and sayde: 13 Let vs sende men before vs, 'to spye vs out the londe, and to brynge vs worde agayne, by what waye we shal go vp, and to what cities we shal come. That pleased me well, and I toke twolue men from amonge you, of euery trybe one. Which whan they were departed, and wente vp to hye countre, and came to the ryuer Escol, they spyed it out, and toke of the frute of y londe with the, and broughte it downe vnto vs, and broughte vs worde agayne, and sayde: It is a good londe, that the LORDE oure God hath geuen vs.

But ye wolde not go vp, and were dishobedient vnto the mouth of the LORDE youre God, and murmured in youre tentes, and sayde: Because the LORDE hateth vs, therfore hath he broughte vs out of the londe of Egipte, to delyuer vs in to the handes of the Amorites, to destroye vs. Whither shal we go vp? TEARE O Israel, This daie shalt thou go ouer Iordane, that thou maiest come in to conquere the nacions, which are greater and mightier then thou, 'greate cities, walled vp vnto heauen, a greate people and of an hye stature, namely the childre of Enakim, whom thou hast knowne, and of whom thou hast herde saye : Who is able to stonde agaynst the children of Enakim? Therfore shalt thou knowe this daye, that the LORDE thy God goeth before the, §a cosumynge fyre. He shal destroye the, and shall subdue them before the, and shal drive them out, a shortly shall he brynge the to naught, as the LORDEhath promysed the.

Now whan the LORDE thy God hath expelled them out before the, saye not thou the in thine hert: The LORDE hath brought me in to take possession of this lande for myne awne righteousnes sake, where as v LORDE yet dryueth out the Heithen before the, because of their vngodlynes."

For thou commest not in to take their londe in possession, for thine awne righteousnes sake, and because of thy right hert: but the LORDE dryueth out these Heythen, for their awne vngodlynesse sake, and that he maye perfourme the worde, which the LORDE hath sworne vnto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and lacob.

Vnderstonde now therfore, that the LORDE B thy God geneth not the this londe to possesse it, for thine awne righteousnes sake. For thou art a styffnecked people.

He hath caused you to walke fortye yeares in the wyldernesse. "Youre clothes are not waxed olde vpon you, nether is thy shue waxed olde on thy fote. Ye haue eaten no bred, and dronken no wyne, ner stronge drynke, that ye mighte knowe, that he is $ LORDE youre God.

Ye stonde this daye all before the LORDE youre God, the chefe rulers of youre trybes, youre Elders, youre officers, euery man in Israel, youre children, youre wyues,  $\mathring{y}$  straungers that are in thine hoost,  $\dagger$  from the hewer of thy wodd vnto  $\mathring{y}$  drawer of thy water : that thou shuldest enter in to the couenaunt of the LORDE thy God, and in to the ooth which the LORDE thy God maketh with the this daye, that he mighte set the vp this daye to be a people vnto himself, and that he mighte be thy God, as he hath sayde vnto the,  $\ddagger$  and as he sware vnto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Iacob.

For I make not this couenaunt and this ooth with you onely, but both with you y are here this daye, and stonde with vs before the LORDE oure God, and also with them that C are not here with vs this daye. For ye knowe how we have dwelt in the londe of Egipte, and how we came thorow the myddes of the Heythen, whom ye passed by, and sawe their abhominacions and their Idols, wodd and stone, syluer and golde, which were with them: Lest there be amoge you man or woman, or an housholde, or a trybe, which turneth awaye his hert this daye from the LORDE oure (iod, to go and to serve § goddes of these nacions: and lest there be amonge you some rote, that beareth gall g wormwodd: so that though he heare the wordes of this curse, he blesse him selfe yet in his hert, and saye: Uush, it shal not be so euell. The men sayde vnto her: || Yf we shewe not mercy and faithfulnesse vpon the, whan the LORDE geueth vs the londe, then let oure soule dye for you, so farre as thou

And she knyt the rose coloured lyne in the wyndowe.

They wente on their waye, and came to the mountaynes, and remayned there thre dayes, tyll they that followed vpon them were come agayne: for they soughte them thorow euery strete, g yet they founde them not. So the two men turned agayne, and departed from the mountaynes, and passed ouer (Iordane) and came to Iosua the sonne of Nun, and tolde him euery thinge, as they had founde it, g they sayde vnto Iosua: The LORDE hath geuë vs all the londe in to oure handes, and all they that dwell in the londe, are sore afrayed of vs.

The bi. Chapter.

S for Iericho, it was shut a kepte because a of the childre of Israel, so that no man mighte go out ner in. But the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua: Bcholde, I haue geuen Iericho with  $\psi$  kynge and men of warre therof, in to thy hande. Let all the men of warre go once rounde aboute y cite, and do so sixe dayes. But vpon the seuenth daye let the prestes take the seuen trompettes of the yeare of lubilye before the Arke, and go the same seuenth daye seuen tymes aboute the cite, and let the prestes blowe the trompettes. And whan the horne of the years of Iubilye bloweth and maketh a sounde, so that ye heare the trompettes, all the people shal make a greate shoute, then shal the walles of the cite fall downe, and ŷ people shal fall in, euery one straight before him.

11 Then Iosua the sonne of Nun called 🕏 prestes, and sayde vnto them : Beare ye the † Arke of the couenaunt, and let seuen prestes take the seuen trompettes of the yeare of lubilyc before the Arke of the LORDE, But vnto the people he sayde: Get you hence, and go roude aboute the cite: and let him that is harnessed, go before the Arke of the LORDE. Whan Iosua had spoken this vnto the people, the seuen prestes bare the seuen trompettes of the yeare Iubilye before the Arke of the LORDE, and wente g blew the trompettes, and the Arke of the LORDES couenaut folowed after them : and who so was harnessed, wente before the prestes that blewe the trompettes, and the multitude folowed the Arke. And all was full of y noyse of the trompettes. But Iosua commaunded the people, and sayde: Ye shall make no shoute, ner let youre voyce be herde, nether shall ye geue one worde out of youre mouth, vntyll the daye y I saye vnto you: Make a shoute, then make a shoute. E

So the Arke of the LORDE wente once rounde aboute the cite, and came agayne in to ∮ hooste, α remayned therin : for Iosua sed to ryse vp early in the mornynge. And the prestes bare the Arke of the LORDE : o dyd the seuen prestes beare the seuen trompettes of the yeare of Iubilye before y Arke of the LORDE, and wente and blewe the trompettes: and who so was harnessed, wente before the, but y multitude folowed y Arke of the LORDE. And all was full of the noyse of the trompettes.

The seconde daye wente they once aboute the cite also, and came agayne in to the hoost. Thus dyd they sixe dayes. But vpon the seueth daye whan the mornynge sprynge arose, they gat them vp early, and wente after the same maner seuen tymes aboute y cite, so that vpon the same one seuenth daye they wente seuen tymes aboute the cite.

And at the seucth tyme whan the prestes D blewe the trompettes, Iosua sayde vnto the people : Make a shoute, for & LORDE hath delyuered you the cite : Howbeit this cite, a all that is therin, shalbe damned vnto the LORDE: * onely the harlot Rahab shal lyue, g all that are with her in y house, for she hyd the messaungers, whom we sent forth. † Onely bewarre of it that is damned, lest ye damne youre selues (yf ye take ought of it which is damned) and make the hoost of Israel to be damned, and brynge it in to mysfortune. But all the syluer and golde, with the ornamētes of brasse g yron, shalbe sanctified vnto the LORDE, that it may come to the LORDES treasure.

Then made the people a greate shoute, and the prestes blewe the trompettes (for whan the people herde the noyse of the trompettes, they made a greate shoute) ‡ and the walles fell, and the people clymmed vp in to the cite, euery one straight before him. Thus they wanne y cite, and 9 destroyed all that was in the cite with the edge of the swerde, both man and woman, yonge and olde, oxe, shepe, and Asse.

But Iosua sayde vnto y two men which E had spyed out the londe: Go in to the house of the harlot, and bringe out the woman fro thence with all that she hath, acordynge as ye haue sworne vnto her. Then y yonge men (the spyes) wente in, and brought forth Rahab with hir father and mother, a brothren, and all that she had, and all hir kynred, and caused her to dwell without the hoost of Israel. As for the cite, they brent it with fyre, all that was therin: onely the syluer and golde, and the ornamentes of brasse and yro put they vnto the treasure in the house of & LORDE: but Iosua let || the harlot Rahab lyue, with hir fathers house, and all that she had: a she dwelt in Israel vnto this

At the same tyme sware Iosua, and sayde: * Cursed be that man before the LORDE, which setteth vp this cite of Iericho g buyldeth it: Whan he laieth ŷ foundacio therof, let it cost him his first sonne: And wha he setteth vp the gates of it, let it cost him his yogest Thus the LORDE was with Iosua, sonne. so that he was spoken of in all londes.

The bij. Chapter.

DUT the children of Israel had comytted n a sinne in the "thinge y was damned: for Achan the sonne of Charmi the sonne of Sabdi the sonne of Serah, of y trybe of Iuda, toke some of it y was daned. Then was the wrath of the LORDE fearce ouer the children of Israel.

Now whan Iosua sent out men from Iericho vnto Hai, which lyeth besyde Bethauē on ŷ east syde of Bethel, he sayde vnto thē: Go vp, and spye the londe. And whan they had gone vp, and spyed out Hai, they came agayne to Iosua, and sayde vnto him: Let not all the people go vp, but vpon a two or thre thousande, that they maye go vp and smyte Hai, lest all the people weerye them selues there, for they are but fewe.

So there wente vp, of the people vpon a thre thousande men, and they fled before the men of Hai, and they of Hai smote vpon a syxe and thyrtie men of them, and chaced them from the porte vnto Sebarim, and smote them downe the waye. Then was the hert of the people discoraged, † and became like water. As for Iosua he rente his clothes, and fell vpon his face vnto the earth before the Arke of the LORDE, vntill the eueninge, with the Elders of Israel, and cast dust vpon their heades.

B And Iosua sayde: Oh LORDE LORDE, wherfore hast thou broughte this people ouer Iordane, to delyuer vs in to the handes of the Amorites to destroye vs? O that we had taried beionde Iordane, as we begane. Oh my LORDE, what shal I saye, whyle Israel turneth his backe vpon his enemies? Whā the Cananites heare of this, they shal compasse vs rounde aboute, yee and rote out oure names from of the earth. What wylt thou do then vnto thy greate name?

Then sayde the LORDE vnto Iosua: Stode vp, why lyest thou so vpon thy face? Israel hath offended, and trasgressed ouer my couenaunt, which I commaunded the. They haue taken also of the thinge that was damned, and haue stollen, and dyssembled, and layed it amonge their ornamentes. The children of Israel are not able to stonde before their aduersaries, but must turne their backes vpon their enemies: for they are acursed. I wyll no more be with you from hece forth yf ye put not out the damned from amonge you.

Stonde vp, and sanctifie the people, and  $\mathbf{I}$ saye: 'Sanctifie youre selues agaynst tomorow for thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: ‡ There is a damned thinge in the O Israel, therfore canst thou not stonde before thine enemies, tyll ye put awaye the damned from amonge you. And ye shall ryse vp early, one trybe after another: and loke which trybe so euer the LORDE taketh, the same shall come forth, one kynred after another: and loke which kynred the LORDE taketh, the same shall come forth, one house after another. And loke what house the LORDE taketh, the same shal come forth, one housholder after another. And who so euer is founde in \$ curse, the same shalbe burnt in the fyre with all that he hath: because he hath gone beyonde the couenaunt of the LORDE, and committed folye in Israel.

Then Iosua gat him vp by tymes in the mornynge, and brought forth Israel, one trybe after another, and y trybe of Iuda was taken. And whan he had brought forth the kynreds in Iuda, 🖞 kinred of the Serahites was taken. And whan he had brought forth the kynred of the Serahites, one housholde after another, Sabdi was taken. And whā he had brought forth his house, one housholder after another, Achan the sonne of Charmi y sonne of Sabdi the sonne of Serah of the trybe of Iuda, was taken.

And Iosua sayde vnto Achan: My sonne, geue the glory vnto the LORDE the God of Israel, and geue him the prayse, and tell me, what thou hast done, and hide nothinge fro me.

Then answered Achan vnto Iosua, and B sayde : Verely I haue synned agaynst LORDE God of Israel, thus a thus have I done: I sawe amoge y spoiles a costly Babilonish garment, and two hudreth Sycles of

Then Iosua sent messaungers thither, which ranne to the tente, and beholde, it was hyd in his tente, and the siluer vnder it. And they toke it out of the tente, and broughte it vnto Iosua, and to all the children of Israel and poured it before the LORDE. And Iosua sayde: For so moch as thou hast troubled vs, the LORDE trouble the this daye. And all Israel stoned him, and burned him with fyre with all that he had. #### The biff. Chapter.

A ND $ LORDE saide vnto Iosua: Feare not, and be not afrayed. "Take all the men of warre with the, and ryse, and get the vp vnto Hai. Beholde, I haue geuen in to thy hande, the kynge of Hai with his people in his cite g countre. And thou shalt do with Hai and the kynge of it, *as thou dyddest with Iericho and the kynge therof, sauynge that ye shal deale amõge you their spoyle g catell: but set thou a † preuy watch behynde the cite.

Then Iosua arose, and all § men of warre, to go vp vnto Hai: and Iosua chose thirtie thousande fightinge men, and sent them out by night, and commaunded them, and sayde: Take hede, ye shal be § preuye watch behynde the cite, but go not to farre from the cite, and se that ye be redye alltogether. As for me and all the people that is with me, we wyll make vs to the cite. And whan they come forth agaynst vs (tas afore) we wyll flye before them, that they maye folowe out after vs, tyll we have prouoked them forth of the cite: for they shal thinke that we flye before them, like as at § first. And whyle we flye before them, ye shal get you vp out of the preuy watch, and wynne the cite. For § LORDE youre God shal delyuer it in to youre handes. But whan ye haue wonne the cite, set fyre vpon it, doinge sacordinge vnto the worde of the LORDE. Beholde, I haue commaunded you.

So Iosua sent them awaye, g they wente vnto the place of the preuy watch, and laye betwixte Bethel and Hai, on the west syde of Hai. But Iosua abode that night amoge the people. And in the mornynge he arose early, and set the people in order, and wente vp with the Elders of Israel before the people towarde Hai: and all the men of warre that were with him, wente vp, g gat them forth, and came ouer agaynst the cite, and pitched their tentes on the north syde of Hai, so y there was but a valley betwene him and Hai.

He had taken aboute a fyue thousande men, and set them in the hynder watch betwene Bethel and Hai, on the west syde of the cite, and they ordred the people of the whole hoost that was on the north syde of the cite, so that the vttemost of the people reached vnto the west ende of the cite. So Iosua wente the same nighte in to the myddes of the valley.

But whan the kynge of Hai sawe that, he made haist, and gat him vp early, and the men out of the cite, to mete Israel to y battayll, with all his people, euen righte before the felde: for he wyst not that there was a preuy watch behynde him on the backe syde But Iosua and all Israel were of the cite. feble before them, and fled by the waye to y Then cried all the people in B wyldernesse. the cite, that they shulde followe vpon them, and they folowed after Iosua and ruszshed out of the cite, so that there remayned not one man in Hai and Bethel, which wente not out to folowe vpon Israel, and they lefte the cite stondinge open, that they mighte persecute Israel.

The sayde  $\hat{y}$  LORDE vnto Iosua: Reach out the speare that thou hast in thine hande, towarde Hai: for I wyll delyuer it in to thy hande. behynde them, and the smoke of the cite wente vp towarde heauen, and they had no place to flie vnto, nether hither ner thither: and the people that fled towarde the wyldernes turned aboute, to folowe vpon them.

- And whan Iosua and all Israel sawe, y the Æ hynder watch had wonne the cite (for $ smoke of the cite ascended) they turned againe, and smote the men of Hai. And they in the cite came forth also agaynst them, so y they came in the myddes amonge Israel on both the sydes, and they slewe them, so that there was not one man of them left ouer or escaped: and they toke the kynge of Hai alyue, and broughte him vnto Iosua. And wha Israel had slavne all the inhabiters of Hai, which had folowed vpon them in the felde and in the wildernesse: and whan they were all fallen thorow the edge of the swerde, tyll they were destroied, the turned all Israel vnto Hai, and smote it with the edge of y swerde. And of all them which fell that daye fro man vnto womā, there were twolue thousande, all men of Hai.
- J But Iosua withdrue not his hande (wherwith he reached out the speare) tyll all the inhabiters of Hai were vtterly destroyed, * sauynge the catell and the spoyle of ŷ cite, dyd Israel parte amonge them selues, acordinge vnto the worde of the LORDE, which he comaunded Iosua. And Iosua burned vp Hai and made an heape therof for euer, which is there yet vnto this daye. And the kynge of Hai caused he to be hanged on a tre vntyll the euen.

<sup>a</sup> But whā the Sonne was gone downe, he commaunded to take his body from the tre, and to cast it vnder the gate of the cite, and made vpon him a greate heape of stones, which is there yet vnto this daye.

* Then buylded Iosua an altare vnto the LORDE God of Israel vpon mount Ebal acordinge as Moses the seruaunt of ÿ LORDE commaunded the children of Israel, as it is wrytten in the boke of the lawe of Moses euen an altare of whole stone, whervpon there was no yron lifted: and he offred burntofferinges and healthofferinges, and there vpon the stones he wrote the seconde lawe of Moses, which he wrote before the childrē of Israel.

Afterwarde caused he to proclame all the wordes of the lawe of the blessynge and cursynge, as it is wrytten in the boke of the lawe. There was not one worde that Moses commaunded, but Iosua caused it to be proclamed before all the congregacion of Israel, and before the weme. and children, and straugers which walked amonge them.

Elders and all the inhabiters of our countre : Take fode with you for youre iourney, and go mete them, and saye vnto them : We are youre seruaūtes, therfore make now a bonde with vs: This oure bred that we toke out of oure houses for oure foode, was new whan we toke oure iourney towarde you: but now lo, it is harde g moulde. And these bottels fylled we new, and lo, they are rēte. And these oure clothes and shues are waxed olde, by  $\hat{y}$ reason of the sore longe iourney.

Then the captaynes toke their vytayles, and C axed not the mouth of the LORDE. *And Iosua made peace with them, and set vp a couenaunt with them, that they shulde be saued alyue, and the rulers of the congregacion sware vnto them. But thre dayes after that they had made a couchaunt with them, they herde, that they were their neghbours, and dwelte amonge them : For as the children of Israel wente forth on their journey, they came on the thirde daye vnto their cities, which are called Gibeon, Caphira, Beeroth, and Cirath learin, and snote the not, because that the rulers of the congregacion had sworne vnto them by the name of the LORDE the God of Israel.

But whan all the congregacion murmured agaynst the rulers, all the rulers sayde vnto the whole congregacion: We haue sworne vnto them by the LORDE the God of Israel, therfore maye we not touch them. But this wil we do vnto them: Let them lyue, that there come no wrath vpon vs, because of the ooth that we haue made vnto them.

And the rulers sayde vnto them: Let them lyue, that they maye be thewers of wodd and bearers of water for the whole congregacion, as the rulers haue sayde vnto them. Then Iosua called them, and commened with them, and sayde: Wherfore haue ye disceaued vs, and sayde, that ye were farre from vs, where as ye dwell amonge vs? Therfore shall ye be curred, so that of you there shall not cease seruantes to hew wodd and to beare water for the house of my God.

They answered Iosua, g sayde: It was tolde thy serumines, that the LORDE thy God communded Moses his seruaunt, that he shulde gene you the whole lode, and that he wolde destroye all the inhabiters of the londe before you: therfore were we sore afrayed of oure lyues before you, and thus haue we done. But now lo, we are in thy handes: loke what thou thinkest good and righte to do vnto vs, that do.

And he dyd euen so vnto them, and delyuered them from the children of Israels hāde, that they shulde not slaye them. So vpō the same daye Iosua made them hewers of wodd and water bearers for the congregacion, and for the altare of the LORDE vnto this daye, in the place that he shall chose.

The r. Chapter.

WHAN Adonisedech the kynge of Ierusalem herde, that Iosua had wonne Hai, and damned it, and done vnto Hai and $ kynge of it, like as he dyd vnto Iericho and to the kynge therof, ‡ and that they of Gibcon had made peace with Israel, and were come vnder them, they were sore afrayed. For Gibeon was a greate cite, like as one of the kynges cities, and greater then Hai, and all the citesyns therof were men of armes. Therfore sent he vnto Hoham the kynge of Hebron, and to Pirea the kynge of Iarmuth, and to Iaphia the kynge of Lachis, and to Debir the kynge of Eglon, and caused to saie vnto them: Come vp vnto me, and helpe me, that we maie smyte Gibeon, for they have made peace with Iosua and the children of Israel. Then came the fyue kynges of the Amorites together, and wente vp, the kynge of Ierusalem, the kynge of Hebron, y kynge of Iarmuth, the kynge of Lachis, the kynge of Eglon, with all their armies, g layed sege vnto Gibeon, and foughte agaynst it.

Howbeit they of Gibeon sent vnto Iosua to 33 Gilgall, and caused to save vnto him : Withdrawe not thine hande from thy scruauntes, come vp soone vnto vs: delyuer and helpe vs, for all the kynges of the Amorites that dwell vpon the mountaynes, are gathered together Iosua wente vp from Gilgall, agaynst vs. and all the warryers and all the men armes And the LORDE sayde vnto with him. Iosua: SFeare them not, for I haue geue them in to thy hande. There shall not one of them be able to stonde before the. So Iosua came sodenly vpon them, for all that night wente he vp from Gilgall. |And the LÖRDE discomfyted the before Israel, and smote them with a greate slaughter at Gibeon:

Chap. rí.

After that wente Iosua with all Israel from Eglon vnto Hebron, and foughte agaynst it, and wanne it, and smote it with y edge of the swerde, and the kynge of it, and all the cities therof, and all the soules that were therin, and let not one remayne, acordynge vnto all as he had done vnto Eglon : and damned it, and all the soules that were therin.

Then turned Iosua agayne with all Israel 6 towarde Debir, and fought agaynst it, and wanne it, with the kinge of it, and all y cities therof, and smote them with the edge of the swerde, and damned all y soules that were therin, and let not one remayne ouer. Euen as he had done vnto Hebro and Lybna with their kynges, so dyd he also vnto Debir, and the kynge therof.

Thus Iosua smote all the londe vpon the mountaynes, and towarde the south, and in the lowe countrees, and by the ryuers, with all their kynges, and let not one remaine ouer and damned all that had breth, *as the LORDE God of Israel had commaunded. And Iosua smote them from Cades Bernea vnto Gaza, and all the londe of Gosen vnto Gibeon, and toke all these kynges with their lode at one tyme: for the LORDE God of Israel foughte for Israel. And Iosua wente agayne with all Israel to the tentes vnto Gilgal.

The ri. Chapter

WHAN labin the kynge of Asor herde A | this, he sent vnto Iabob the kynge of Madon and to the kynge of Samron, and to the kynge of Achsaph, and to the kynges that dwelt towarde the north vpon the mountaynes, and in the playne on the southsyde of Cineroth, and in the lowe countrees, and in the lordshippes of Dor by the see syde: and to the Cananites towarde y east and west, to y Amorites, Hethites, Pheresites, and Iebusites, vpon the mountaynes and to the Heuites, vnder mount Hermon in the londe of Mispa. These wete out with all their armies, a greate people, as many as y sonde of the see, and excendinge many horses and charettes. All these kinges gathered the selues, and came, and pitched together by y water of Meram, to fighte with Israel.

And the LORDE sayde vnto Iosua : Feare

 Deut. 20. c. † Iosu, 10. b. ‡ Deut. 20. c.

them not, for tomorow aboute this tyme wil I delyuer them all slayne, before the children of Israel: thou shalt lame their horses, and burne their charettes with fire. + And Iosua came sodenly vpon them, and all the men of warre with him by the water of Merom, a fell vpon them. And the LORDE delyuered them in to $ handes of Israel, and they smote them, and chaced them vnto greate Sido and to the warme water, and to the playne of Mispa towarde y east: and smote them, vntyll there remayned not one.

Then dealte Iosua with them as $ LORDE had saide vnto him, g lamed their horses, g brent their charettes. And he turned backe at the same tyme, g wanne Hasor, g smote $ kynge of it with the swerde (for Hasor was afore tyme y head cite of all these kyngdomes) and smote all the soules that were therin with the edge of the swerde, and damned it, a let nothinge remayne that had breth, a damned Hasor with fyre. All the cities of these kyngdomes wane Iosua also, and smote the with the edge of the swerde, and damned them, ‡ acordinge as Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE commaunded.

Howbeit the cities that stode vpon the C hilles, dyd not the children of Israel burne with fyre: but Hasor onely dyd Iosua burne. § And all the spoyles of these cities and the catell, dyd the children of Israel deale amonge them, but smote all the men with the edge of the swerde, tyll they had destroyed them, and let nothinge remayne that had breth. As the LORDE commaunded his seruaunt Moses, and as Moses commaunded Iosua, euen so dyd Iosua, so that there was nothinge vndone of all that the LORDE comaunded Moses.

So Iosua toke all this lode vpon y moutaynes,  $\mathfrak{a}$  all  $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$  lyeth towarde the south,  $\mathfrak{a}$  all the londe of Gosen, and the lowe countre, g the playne felde, and the mountayne of Israel with the valley therof, from the mountayne that parteth the londe vp towarde Seir, vnto Baalgad, in the playne of mout Libanus beneth mount Hermon. All their kynges toke he, and smote them, and put the to death. Howbeit he warred a longe season with these kynges.

Yet was there not one cite, that yelded it selfe peaceably vnto the children of Israel ¶ (excepte the Heuites, which dwelt at Gibeon) but they wanne them all with battayll. And this was done so of the LORDE that their hert was so hardened, to come against the children of Israel with battayll, 5 they mighte be dāned,  $\alpha$  no fauoure to be shewed vnto them, but to be destroyed, \*as the LORDE commaunded Moses.

At the same tyme came Iosua, and roted out the Enakims from y mountayne, from Hebron, from Debir, from Anab, from euery mountayne of Iuda, and from euery mountayne of Israel, and damned the with their cities, and let none of the Enakims remayne in the londe of the children of Israel, saue at Gasa, tat Gath, at Asdod, there remayned of them.

Thus Iosua conquered all the londe acordinge vnto all as the LORDE sayde vnto Moses,  $\mathfrak{g}$  gaue it vnto Israel to enheritaunce,‡ vnto euery trybe his porcion, and  $\mathfrak{F}$  londe rested from warre.

- And Caleb droue from thence the thre sonnes of Enak, Sesai, Ahiman, and Thalmas begotten of Enak. And from thece he wente vp to the inhabiters of Debir. (As for Debir, it was called Kiriath Sepher afore tyme.) And Caleb sayde: t Who so smyteth Kiriath Sepher and wynneth it, I wyll geue him my doughter Achsa to wyfe. Then Athniel the sonne of Kenas the brother of Caleb wanne it: and he gaue him his doughter Achsa to wife.

And it fortuned whan they wente in, that she was counceled of hir houszbande, to axe a pece of londe of hir father. And she fell downe from the asse. Then sayde Caleb vnto her: What ayleth the? She sayde: Geue me a blessynge, for thou hast geuē me a south (and drye) londe: geue me welles of water also. Then gaue he her welles aboue and beneth.

This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of Iuda amonge their kynreds. And the cities of the trybe of the children of Iuda, from one to another by the coastes of the Edomites towarde the south, were these: Cabzeel, Eder, Iagur, Kina, Dimona, Adada, Kedes, Hazor, Iethnam, Siph, Telem, Bealot, Hazor Hadatha, Kirioth Hezron that is Hasor: Amā, Sema, Molada, Hazor Gadda, Hesmon, Beth palet, Hazer Sual, Beer Seba, Bisziothia, Baala, Iim, Azem, Eltholad, Chesil, Harma, Ziklag, Madmanna, San Sāna, Lebaoth, Silhim, Ain, Rimō. § These are nyne and twentye cities g their vyllages.

But in the lowe countrees was Esthaol, Zaren, Asna, Saroah, Engannim, Thapua, Enam, Iarmoth, Adullam, Socho, Aseka, Saaraim, Adithaim, Gedera, Giderothim. These are fourtene cities g their vyllages.

Zenā Hadasa, Migdal Gad, Dilean, Mispa, Iakthiel, Lachis, Bazekath, Eglö, Chabon, Lachmā, Chithlis, Gedoroth, Beth Dagon, Naama, Makeda. These are sixtene cities and their vyllages.

Libna, Ether, Asen, Iephthah, Asua, Nezib, Keila, Achsib, Maresa. These are nyne cities and their vyllages. Ekron with hir doughters and vyllages. From Ekron vnto the see, all that reacheth vnto Asdod and the vyllages therof. Asdod with the doughters and vyllages therof. Gasa with hir doughters and vyllages vnto the water of Egipte. And the greate see is his border.

But vpon the mount was Samir, Iatir, Socho, Danna, Kiriath Sanna, that is Debir: Anab, Esthemo, Annim, Gosen, Holon, Gilo. These are eleuen cities and their vyllagies. Maon, Carmel, Siph, Iuta, Iesrael, Iakdea, Sanoah, Kain, Gibea, Thimna. These are ten cities and their vyllages. Halhul, Bethzur, Gedor, Maarath, Beth Anoth, Elthekon. These are sixe cities and their vyllages. Kiriath Baal (that is Kiriath Iearim) Harabba, two cities a their vyllages. And in the wyldernesse was Betharaba, Middin, Sechacha, Nibsan, and the Salt cite, and Engaddi. These are sixe cities and their vyllagies. || But the Iebusites dwelt at Ierusalem, and the children of Iuda coude not dryue them awaye. So the lebusites remayne with the children of Iuda at Ierusalem vnto this daye.

ND the lot fell vnto the children of  $\mathfrak{A}$ Ephraim frō Iordane ouer agaynst Iericho, vnto the water on the east syde of Iericho, and the wyldernesse,  $\overset{1}{y}$  goeth vp from Iericho thorow the mountayne of Bethel, and commeth out from Bethel vnto Lus, and goeth thorow the coast of Arciataroth, and stretcheth downe westwarde vnto  $\overset{1}{y}$  coaste of Iaphleti to  $\overset{1}{y}$  border of the lower Bethoron, and vnto Gaser: and the ende therof is by the greate see. This the children of Ioseph (Manasses  $\mathfrak{g}$  Ephraim) receaued to enheritaunce.

The Border of the children of Ephraim amonge their kynreds of their enheritaunce from the east, was Ataroth Adar vnto the vpper Bethoron, g goeth out westwarde by Michmethath that lyeth towarde the north, there fetcheth it a compasse towarde the east syde of the cite Thaenath Silo, and goeth 33 there thorow from the east vnto Ianoha, and commeth downe from Ianoha vnto Ataroth and Naaratha, and bordreth on Iericho, and goeth out at Iordane. amonge the enheritaunce of the children of Manasse. And they droue not out § Cananites, which dwelt at Gaser. So § Cananites remayned amoge Ephraim vnto this daye, and became tributaries.

The rbij. Chapter.

ND the lot fell vpō the trybe of Manasse (for * he is Iosephs first sonne) and it fell vpon Machir the first sonne of Manasse v father of Gilead: for he was a mā of armes, therfore had he Gilead and Basan. It fell also vnto the other children of Manasse, namely vnto v childrē of Abieser, the children of Helek, the children of Asriel, the children of Sechem, the children of Hepher, and the children of Semida: These are the childrē of Manasse the sonne of Ioseph, males, amonge their kynreds.

<sup>a</sup> But Zelaphead the sonne of Hepher the sonne of Gilead, the sonne of Machir, the sonne of Manasse, had no sonnes, but doughters, and their names are these: Mahala, Noa, Hagla, Milca, Tirza, and they came before Eleasar the prest, and before Iosua the sonne of Nun, and before the rulers, and sayde: The LORDE commaunded Moses, to geue vs enheritaunce amonge oure brethren. And so they had enheritaunce geuen them amonge their fathers brethren, acordinge to the commaundement of the LORDE.

There fell vpon Manasse ten meetlynes without the londe of Gilead and Basan, which lyeth beyode Iordane. For y doughters of Manasse receaued enheritaunce amonge his sonnes: but the other children of Manasse had the londe of Gilead. And the border of Manasse was fro Asser forth vnto Michmethath, that lyeth before Sichem, and reacheth vnto the righte syde of them of En Tapuah : for the londe of Tapuah fell vnto Manasse, and the border of Manasse is vnto the childre of Ephraim. Then commeth it downe to Nahelkana towarde the south syde of the ryuer cities, which are Ephraims amonge the cities of Manasse. But from the north is the border of Manasse by the ryuer, and goeth forth by the see syde, south warde vnto Ephraim, and to Manasse northwarde, and the see is his coaste. And it shal border on Aser from the north, and on Isachar from the easte.

So (amoge Isachar and Asser) Manasses  $\mathbb{Z}$ had Beth Sean and the townes therof, and Ieblaam and the townes therof, and them of Dor and their townes, and them of En Dor and their townes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  them of Taanach and their townes, and them of Mageddo and their townes, and the thirde parte of (the cite) Nophet. And the children of Manasse coude not dryue awaye the inhabiters of these cities, but the Cananites beganne to dwell in the same londe. Howbeit whan the children of Israel were able, they made the Cananites tributaries, and droue them not out.

Then spake the children of Ioseph vnto Iosua, and sayde: Wherfore hast thou geuē me but one porcion and one meetlyne of enheritaunce, and I am yet a greate people, as the LORDE hath blessed me so largely? Then sayde Iosua vnto them: For so moch as thou art a greate people, go vp therfore in to $ wodd, and make thy selfe rowme there in the londe of the Pheresites and Raphaim, seynge moūt Ephraim is to narowe for the.

Then sayde the children of Ioseph: We B shal not be able to attayne vnto the mountaynes, for there are yron charettes amonge all the Cananites, that dwell in the londe of Emek, by whom lyeth Beth Sean and the vyllages therof, and Iesrael in Emek. Iosua sayde vnto the house of Ioseph, euen to Ephraim and Manasses: Thou art a greate people,  $\mathfrak{g}$  for so moch as thou art so greate, thou must not haue one lot, but the mountayne where  $\mathfrak{F}$  wod is, shal be thine: rote  $\mathfrak{F}$ out for  $\mathfrak{F}$ , so shall it be the outgoinge of thy porcion, whan thou dryuest out the Cananites, which haue yrō charettes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  are mightie.

The rbiij. Chapter.

A ND all the multitude of the children of Israel gathered them selues together vnto Silo, and they set vp ŷ Tabernacle of witnesse, and the londe was subdued vnto them. But there were yet seuen trybes of the childre of Israel, vnto whom they had not deuyded their enheritaunce. And Iosua sayde vnto the children of Israel: How longe are ye so slowe, to go and coquere the londe, which the LORDE God of youre fathers hath geuen you? Chose you thre men out of euery trybe, ŷ I maye sende them, and that they maye get them vp and go thorow the londe, and descrybe it acordinge to the enheritaunces thereof, and come vnto me.

Deuyde the londe in seuen partes. Iudas shal remayne vpon his borders of the south syde, and the house of Ioseph shal remayne vpon his borders of the north parte: but descrybe ye the londe in seuen partes, and brynge them vnto me, then shal I cast  $\hat{y}$  lot for you before the LORDE oure God. \* For the Leuites haue no porcion amonge you, but the presthode of the LORDE is their enheritaunce. "As for Gad g Ruben and  $\hat{y}$  halfe trybe of Manasse, they haue receaued their enheritaunce beyonde Iordane eastwarde, which Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE gaue them.

33 Then the men gat vp, to go their waye. And whan they were aboute to go for to descrybe the londe, Iosua commaunded them, and sayde : Go youre waye, and walke thorow the londe, and descrybe it, and come agayne vnto me, that I maye cast y lot for you before the LORDE at Silo. So the men departed, and wente thorow the londe, and descrybed it in seven partes vpon a letter acordinge to the cities, and came to Iosua in to the hoost at Silo. Then Iosua cast the lot ouer them at Silo before the LORDE, and there distributed the londe amonge the children of Israel, vnto euery one his parte.

And the lot of the trybe of the children of Ben Iamin fell acordinge to their kynreds, and the border of their lot wente out betwene the children of Iuda g the children of Ioseph. And their border was on § north quarter of lordane, and goeth vp from the north syde of lericho, and commeth vp to the mountayne westwarde, and goeth out by the wyldernesse of Bethauen, and goeth from thece towarde Lus, euen by the south syde of Lus (that is Bethel) and commeth downe vnto Ataroth Adar by the mountayne which lyeth on y south syde of the lower Bethoron. Then boweth it downe, and fetcheth a compasse vnto the south west quarter from the mount that lyeth ouer agaynst Bethoron towarde the south, and goeth out vnto Kiriath Baal, y is Kirinth learim, a cite of the children of Iuda. This is the west border.

■ But the south border is from Kiriath-Iearim forth, and goeth out towarde the west, and commeth forth vnto ŷ water well of Nepthoah:

and goeth downe by the edge of the mount, that lyeth before the valley of the sonne of Hinnam: and goeth downe thorow the valley of Hinnam on  $\psi$  south syde of the lebusites, and commeth downe to the well of Rogell, and stretcheth from the northwarde, and commeth out vnto En Semes, and commeth forth to the heapes that lye vp towarde Adumim, and cometh downe vnto the stone of Bohen the sonne of Ruben, and goeth a longe besyde y playne felde which lyeth north warde, and commeth downe vnto y playne felde, and goeth besyde Beth Hagla that lyeth towarde the north, and his ende is at the north border of the Salt see, vnto y edge of Iordane south This is the south border. warde.

But Iordane shal be the ende of the east  $\mathbf{B}$  quarter. This is the enheritaunce of  $\mathbf{\mathring{y}}$  children of Ben Iamin in their borders rounde aboute, amonge their kynreds.

The cities of the trybe of the children of Ben Iamin amöge their kynreds are these: Iericho, Beth Hagla, Emek Kezitz, Betharaba, Zemaraim, Bethel, Auim, Haphar, Aphra, Caphar Amonai, Aphni, Gaba: these are twolue cities and their vyllages.

Gibeon, Rama, Beeroth, Mispa, Caphira, Moza, Rekem, Ieerpeel, Thareala, Zela, Eleph, and the Iebusites, that is Ierusalem, Gibeath, Kiriath: these are fourtene cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of the children of Ben Iamin in their kynreds.

The rir. Chapter.

THEN fell the seconde lot of the trybe of a the children of Simeon acordinge to their kynreds, and their enheritaunce was amonge the enheritaunce of y children of Iuda. + And to their enheritaunce they had Beer Seba, Molada, Hazar Sual, Baala, Azem, El Tholad, Bethul, Harma, Ziklag, Betha Markaboth, Hazar Sussa, Beth Lebaoth, and Saruhen : these are thirtene cities a their vyllages. Ain, Rimon, Ether, Asan: these are foure cities and their vyllages. And all v vyllages that lye aboute the cities vnto Balath Beer Ramath towarde the south. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Simeon in their kynreds: for the enheritaunce of the children of Simeon is vnder the porcion of the children of Iuda. The fourth lot fell vpō the childrē of Isachar after their kynreds, a their border was Iesraela, Chessulloth, Sunem, Hapharaim, Sion, Anaharath, Raabith, Kision, Abez, Kemeth, En Gānim, Enhada, Beth Pazez, a bordreth vpon Thabor, Sahazima, Beth Semes, and ŷ outgoinge of it was at Iordane. These are sixtene cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Isachar in their kynreds, cities and vyllages.

The fifth lot fell vpon the trybe of the children of Asser, after their kynreds. And their border was Helkath, Hali, Beten, Achsaph, Alamelech, Amead, Miseal, and borderth on Carmel vnto the see, and on Sihor, and Libnath, and turneth towarde the east vnto Beth Dagon, and bordreth on Zabulon, and on the valley of Iephtael, and towarde the north syde of Beth Emek and Negiel: g commeth out vnto Cabul on the lefte syde of Ebron, Rehob, Hamon and Cana, vnto greate

These are two and twentye cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Asser in their kinreds cities and vyllages.

The syxte lot fell vpon the children of Nephtali in their kynreds. And their border was frö Heleph Elon thorow Zaanaim, Adai Nekeb, Iabne El vnto Lakum, and goeth out vnto Iordane, and turneth westwarde to Asnoth Thabor, and cometh out from thence vnto Hukok, and bordreth on Zabulon towarde the south, and on Asser towarde the west, and on Iuda by Iordane towarde the east : and hath stronge cities, Zidimzer, Hamath Rakath, Chinnaret, Adama, Rama, Hazor, Kedes, Edrei, En Hazor, Iereon, Migdal Elharē, Beth Anath, Beth Sames. These are nyentene cities and their vyllages. This is the enheritaunce of § trybe of the children of Nephtali in their kynreds, cities, and vyllages.

The seventh lot fell vpon the trybe of the  $\mathbf{B}$ children of Dan after their kynreds. And the border of their enheritaunce was Zarea, Esthaol, Irsames, Saalabin, Aialon, Iethla, Elon, Thimnata, Ekron, Eltheke, Gibethö Baalath, Iehud, Bnerbarak, Gat Rimon, Me Iarkon, Rakon with the border by Iapho, and on the same goeth the border of the children of Dan out. And the children of Dā wente vp, and foughte agaynst Lesem, and wanne it, and smote it with the edge of the swerde, and toke it in possession, a dwelt therin, and \*called it Dan, after y name of their father. This is the enheritaunce of the trybe of the children of Dan in their kynreds, cities, and vyllages.

And whā ỷ lōde was all parted out with the borders therof, the children of Israel gaue Iosua the sonne of Nun, an enheritaunce amonge them, and (acordynge to the commaundement of the LORDE) they gaue him ŷ cite that he requyred, namely, † Thimnath Serah, vpon moūt Ephraim: there buylded he the cite, and dwelt therin.

These are the enheritaunces which Eleasar the prest and Iosua  $\mathring{y}$  sonne of Nun, and the chefest of the fathers amonge  $\mathring{y}$  tribes, deuided out by lot vnto the childre of Israel at Silo before the LORDE, euen before the dore of the Tabernacle of wytnes, and so they ended the deuydinge out of the londe.

and the suburbes therof, Kibzaim and the suburbes therof, Bethron and the suburbes therof.

Of the trybe of Dan foure cities, Eltheke Ð and v suburbes theref, Gibthon and the suburbes therof, Aialon and the suburbes therof, Gath Rimon and the suburbes therof. Of the halfe trybe of Manasses two cities, Thaenach and the suburbes therof, Gath Rimon and the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the other children of y kynred of Kahath, were ten with their suburbes.

But vnto the children of Gerson amonge the kynreds of the Leuites were geuen, Of the halfe trybe of Manasse two cities, the fre cite for the deedslayer, Gola in Basan and the suburbes therof, Beasthra, and the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Isachar foure cities, Kision and the suburbes therof, Dabrach and the suburbes therof, Iarmuth and the suburbes therof, Engannim and the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Asser foure cities, Miseal, Abdon, Helkath and Rehob with the suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Nephtali thre cities, the fre cite Kedes (for the deedsleyer) in Galile, Hamoth, Dor, and Karthan with the suburbes therof: so that all the cities of the kynred of the Gersonites were thirtene with their suburbes.

Vnto the kynreds of Merari the other Leuites were geuen, Of the trybe of Zabulon foure cities, Iakneam, Kartha, Dimna and Nahalal with y suburbes therof. Of the trybe of Ruben foure cities, Bezer, Iahza, Kedemoth and Mephaat with their suburbes. Of the trybe of Gad foure cities, the fre cite for the deedsleyer, Ramoth in Gilead, Mahanaim, Heszbon and Iaeser with their suburbes: so that all the cities of the children of Merari amonge their kynreds of y other Leuites, were twolue. Thus all the cities of the Leuites amonge y possession of the children of Israel, were eight and fortye with their suburbes. And these cities were so dealte out, that every one had their suburbes rounde aboute, the one as the other.

Thus the LORDE gaue the children of Israel all the londe, which he had sworne vnto their fathers to geue: g they toke possession of it, and dwelt therin. And the LORDE gaue the rest before all those v were aboute them * like as he sware vnto their fathers, g none of their enemies stode agaynst the, but all their enemies delyuered he in to their hande. And their myssed nothinge of all the good that the LORDE had promysed vnto the house of Israel, it came euery whyt.

The rrij. Chapter.

¬HEN Iosua called ∳ Rubenites and A Gaddites, and y halfe trybe of Manasse, and sayde vnto them: Ye haue kepte all, that Moses the serunaunt of the LORDE commaunded you, and haue herkened vnto my voyce in all § I haue commauded you. Ye have not forsaken youre brethre a longe season, vnto this daye, and haue wayted vpon the commaundement of the LORDE youre God. For so moch now as the LORDE youre God hath broughte youre brethre to rest, as he promysed them, turne you now, and go youre waye to youre tentes in to the londe of youre possession, which Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE gaue you beyode Iordane.

But take diligent hede now, that ye do acordinge to the commaundement and lawe which Moses the seruaunt of the LORDE hath commaunded: # That ye loue the LORDE youre God, and walke in all his wayes, and kepe his commaundementes, and 33 cleue vnto him, and serue him with all youre hert and with all youre soule. So Iosua blessed them, and let them go. And they wente vnto their tentes.

Vnto the halfe trybe of Manasse had Moses geuen possession at Basan: vnto the other halfe gaue Iosua amonge their brethren on this syde Iordane westwarde. And whan he let them go to their tentes and blessed them, he sayde vnto them : Ye come home agayne with greate good vnto youre tetes, with exceadynge moch catell, syluer, golde, brasse, yron and rayment, $distribute therfore the spoyle of youre enemyes amonge youre brethren.

So the Rubenites, Gaddites, and the halfe trybe of Manasse returned, and wente from the children of Israel out of Silo (which lyeth in the londe of Canaan) to go in to the countre of Gilead to the londe of their possession, that they mighte possesse it, acordynge to the commaundement of the LORDE by Moses.

And whan they came vnto the heapes by  $\mathbf{C}$ Iordane, which lye in the londe of Canaan, the same Rubenites, Gaddites, and the halfe trybe of Manasses buylded there besyde Iordane, a fayre greate altare. But whan the children of Israel herde saye: Beholde, the children of Ruben, the children of Gad, and the halfe trybe of Manasse haue buylded an altare ouer agaynst the londe of Canaan vpon the heapes by Iordane on this syde the children of Israel, they gathered them selues together with the whole congregacion at Silo, to go vp agaynst the with an armye. And (in the meane season) they sent to them in to the londe of Gilead, Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest, and with him ten chefe prynces amonge the houses of their fathers, out of euery tribe in Israel one. And they came to the children of Ruben, to the children of Gad, and to the halfe trybe of Manasse in the londe of Gilead, and sayde:

Thus sayeth the whole congregacion of the Ð LORDE vnto you: * What trespace is this, y ye haue trespaced agaynst the God of Israel, that ye shulde turne backe from $ LORDE this daye, to builde you an altare, for to fall awaye from the LORDE?

+ Haue we not ynough of the wickednesse of Peor? from the which we are not yet clensed this daye, and there came a plage amonge the congregacion of the LORDE: and ye turne you backe this daye from the LORDE, and this daye are ye fallen awaye from the LORDE, that he maye be wroth to daye or tomorow at the whole congregacion of the LORDE.

Yf the londe of youre possession be vncleane, then come ouer in to the londe that the LORDE possesseth, where the dwellynge of the LORDE is, and take possessions amonge vs, and fall not awaye from the LORDE and from vs, to builde you an altare without the altare of the LORDE oure God. ‡Did not Achan the sonne of Serah trespace in the thinge that was damned, and the wrath came ouer y whole congregacion of Israel and he wente not downe alone for his myszdede?

E Then answered the children of Ruben, and the children of Gad, and the halfe trybe of Manasse, and sayde vnto the heades and prynces of Israel: The mightie God y LORDE, the mightie God the LORDE knoweth, and I-rael knoweth also, yf this be a trangressynge or trespacynge agaynst the LORDE, then let it not helpe vs this daye: Yf we haue buylded the altare, because we wolde turne awaye backe from the LORDE, to offre burntofferynges or meatofferinges theron, or to make eny deedofferynges vpon it, then let the LORDE requyre it: And yf we haue not done it rather for very feare of this thinge, and sayde: To daye or tomorow mighte youre children saye vnto oure children:

What have ye to do with the LORDE the God of Israel? The LORDE hath set Iordane for a border betwene vs and you ye children of Ruben and Gad, ye haue no porcion in the LORDE: By this shulde youre children make oure children to turne awaye from the feare of the LORDE.

Therfore sayde we: Let vs make oure JF children an altare, not for sacrifice, ner for burntofferinge, §but that it maye be a tokē betwene vs and you, and oure posterities, that we maye serue the LORDE in his sighte with oure burntofferinges, deedofferinges, and other offeringes: and y youre children to daye or tomorow neade not to saye vnto oure children : Ye have no parte in the LORDE.

And we sayde: But yf they shulde speake so vnto vs, or to oure posterities to daye or tomorow, then maye we saye: Beholde the symilitude of v altare of the LORDE, which oure fathers made, not for sacrifyce, ner for burntofferynge, but for a wytnesse betwene vs and you.

God forbydde, that we shulde fall awaye from the LORDE, to turne backe from him this daye, and to buylde an altare for sacrifice, for burntofferinge and for eny presente, without v altare of the LORDE oure God, that stondeth before his Habitacion.

But whan Phineas the prest, and the chefe 3 of the congregacion, the prynces of Israel which were with him, herde these wordes, that the children of Ruben, Gad, and Manasse had spoken, they pleased them well. And Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest sayde vnto the children of Rube, Gad and Manasse: This daye we knowe, that § LORDE is amonge vs, in that ye haue not trespaced agaynst the LORDE in this dede. Now haue ye delyuered the children of Israel out of the hande of the LORDE.

Then Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the prest, and the rulers returned out of the londe of Gilead, from the children of Ruben and Gad vnto & londe of Canaa to the children of Israel, and brought them worde agayne of the matter. Then were the children of Israel well

FTER the death of Iosua the children of Israel axed the LORDE, and sayde: Who shall go vp g be oure captayne of warre against $ Cananites? The LORDE sayde: Iuda shall go vp. * Beholde, I haue delyuered the londe in to his hande. Then sayde Iuda vnto his brother Simeon: Go vp with me in to my lot, and let vs fighte against the Cananites, then wyl I go agayne with the in to thy lot: So Simeon wente with him.

Now whan Iuda wente vp the LORDE delyuered the Cananites and Pheresites in to their hādes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  they slewe tē thousande mē at Besek:  $\mathfrak{g}$  they foūde Adoni Besek at Besek,  $\mathfrak{g}$  foughte agaynst him, and slewe the Cananites and Pheresites. But Adoni Besek fled, and they folowed after him: and whan they had ouertaken him, they cut of the thōbes of his handes and fete.

B Then sayde Adoni Besek : Thre score and ten kynges with the thombes of their hūdes g fete cut of, gathered vp the meate y was lefte vnder my table. †Now as I haue done, so hath God rewarded me agayne. And he was broughte vnto Ierusalē, where he dyed.

And the childre of y Kenyte Moses brother 3 in lawe, wente vp out of the ¶palme cite, with the children of Iuda in to the wyldernesse of Iuda, that lyeth on § south syde of the cite Arad: ** and wente their waye, a dwelt amonge the people. And Iuda wente with his brother Simeon, a they smote the Cananites at Zephath, a damned them, a called the name of the cite Horma.<sup>a</sup> ttluda also wanne Gasa with the borders therof, a Ascalon with hir borders, a Accaron with the coastes therof. And the LORDE was with Iuda, so that he conquered the mountaynes: but them that dwelt in the valley coulde he not conquere, because they had yron charettes. And acordinge as Moses had sayde, they gaue Hebron vnto Caleb, which droue out the thre sonnes of Enak.<sup>4</sup> ‡‡Howbeit y children of Ben Iamin droue not out y Iebusites which dwelt at Ierusalem, but y Iebusites dwelt amonge the children of Ben Iamin at Ierusalem vnto this daye.

Likewyse the children of Ioseph wete vp also vnto Bethel, 'g the LORDE was with the. And the house of Ioseph spyed out Bethel (which afore tyme was called Lus) and the watch men sawe a man goinge out of the cite, and saide vnto him: Shewe vs where we maye come in to the cite, $ we wyll shewe mercy vpon the. #### The ij. Chapter.

DUT there came vp a messauger of y D LORDE from Gilgall vnto Bochim, and sayde: I haue caried you vp hither out of Egipte, and broughte you in to the londe that I sware vnto youre fathers, a saide: *I wyl neuer breake my couenaunt with you, that ye shulde make no couenaunt with the indwellers of this londe, but breake downe their altares: Neuertheles ye haue not herkened vnto my voyce. Wherfore haue ye done this? Then saide I morouer: I wil not dryue them out before you, that they maye be a fall vnto you, and their goddes a snare. And whan y messaunger of the LORDE had spoken these wordes vnto all the children of Israel, the people lifte vp their voyce, a wepte, and called y name of the place Bochim, and offred there vnto the LORDE.

For whan Iosua had sente awaye y people, and the childre of Israel were gone, euery one to his enheritaūce, for to take possession of the londe, the people served the LORDE as longe as Iosua lyued and y Elders, which lyued longe after Iosua, and y sawe all the sonne of Nun, the B E, 'was deed (whan ten yeare olde) they of his inheritaunce at mount Ephraim on nt Gaas. And whan same generacion was gathered vnto their fathers, there came vp after them another generacion, which knew not the LORDE, ner the workes that he had done for Israel.

'Then wroughte the children of Israel euell before the LORDE, and serued Baalim, and forsoke § LORDE the God of their fathers (which broughte them out of the londe of Egipte) and folowed other goddes a the goddes of the nacions that dwelt rounde aboute them, g worshipped them, g displeased the LORDE: for they forsoke y LORDE euer more and more, and serued Baal and Astaroth.

Then  $\mathring{\mathbf{v}}$  wrath of the LORDE waxed whote  $| \mathfrak{C} |$ vpō Israel, a he delyuered the in to y handes of those y spoyled the, that they mighte spoyle them, a solde the in to the handes of their enemies roude aboute, g they were not able to withstonde their enemies eny more, but what waye so euer they wolde out, y hade of the LORDE was agaynst the to their hurte (euen as the LORDE <sup>d</sup> sayde and sware vnto them) and they were sore oppressed.

Now whan the LORDE raysed them vp iudges, which helped them out of the hande of soch as spoyled the, they folowed not the iudges nether, but wente a whoringe after other goddes, g worshipped them, and were soone gone out of y waye y their fathers walked in, to heare the comaundementes of the LORDE, g dyd not as they dyd.

But whan y LORDE raysed vp iudges vnto them, the LORDE was with y iudge, and helped them out of the hande of their enemies, as longe as the judge lyued. ‡ For the LORDE had pitie of their complaynte, which they made ouer those y subdued the and oppressed them.

Chap. (ij.

Therfore waxed the wrath of the LORDE allwaie so whote ouer Israel, that he sayde: For so moch as the people haue transgressed my couenaunt, which I commaunded their fathers, a folowe not my voyce, I wil from hence forth dryue out none of the Heythen, who Iosua lefte behynde him, wha he dyed, * that by them I may proue Israel, whether they wil kepe the waye of the LORDE, to walke therin, as their fathers dyd, or not. Thus the LORDE suffred all these nacions, so that in a shorte tyme he droue them not out, whom he had not geuen ouer in to Iosuas hande.

The iff. Chapter.

THESE are the nacions, whom the A LORDE suffred to remayne, y by them he mighte proue Israel, which had no vnderstondinge in the warres of Canaan: onely because y the trybes of the childre of Israel might knowe g lerne to warre, which afore had no knowlege therof, namely: The fyue lordes of § Philistynes, g all the Cananites, a Sidonians, a the Hethites y dwelt vpon mount Libanus, fro mount Baal Hermon, vntyll a man come vnto Hemath. The same remayned, that Israel mighte be proued by them, that it mighte be knowne whether they wolde herken to the commaundementes of the LORDE, which he commaunded their fathers by Moses.

Now whan the children of Israel dwelt thus amoge the Cananites, Hethites, Amorites, Pheresites, Heuites & Iebusites, + they toke their doughters to wyues, and gaue their doughters vnto their sonnes, a serued their goddes, and wroughte wickednes before the LORDE, a forgat the LORDE their God, a serued Baalim a Astaroth. Then y wrath of y LORDE waxed whote ouer Israel, g he solde the vnder the hade of Cusan Risathaim kynge of Mesopotamia, a so y childre of Israel serued Cusan Risathaim viij. yeare.

刮 The cried the childre of Israel vnto the LORDE, a the LORDE raysed the vp a surioure which delyuered the, namely, ‡ Athmel § sonne of Kenas, Calebs yongest brother. And the sprete of the LORDE came vpon him, a he was judge in Israel, a wente out a warre fare. And & LORDE delyuered Cusan Risathaim the kynge of Syria in to his hade, so y his hande was to stroge for him. § Then was the londe in rest fortye yeares. And Athniel the sonne of Kenas dyed.

But the children of Israel dyd yet more euell before the LORDE. Then the LORDE strengthed Eglon the kynge of § Moabites agaynst ŷ childrē of Israel, because they wrought wickednesse before y LORDE. And he gathered vnto him ŷ childrē of Ammon, g the Amalechites, g wete and smote Israel, and conquered the || cite of the palme trees. And the children of Israel serued Eglon v kynge of v Moabites eightene yeare. The cried they vnto the LORDE. And the LORDE raysed the vp a sauioure, namely Ehud the sonne of Gera & sonne of Iemini, which was a man that mighte do nothinge with his righte hande.

And what the childre of Israel sent a present by him vnto Eglon the kynge of the Moabites, Ehud made him a two edged dagger of a spanne longe, g gyrded it vnder his garmet vpo his righte thye, g broughte v present vnto Eglon the kynge of y Moabites. As for Eglon, he was a very fat man.

And whan he had delyuered the presente,  $\alpha$ he let the people go that had caried the present, and he himselfe turned backe from the Idols at Gilgall, g caused to saye thus (vnto the kynge:) I haue a secrete thinge to tell the O kynge. And he commaunded to kepe sylence, a all they that stode aboute him, wente out from him.

And Ehud came in vnto him. He sat in a syled Sommer perler, which was for him selfe alone. And Ehud saide : I haue somwhat to saye vnto the of God. The rose he vp fro his seate. But Ehud put forth his lefte hande, g toke the dagger from his righte thye, g thrust it in to his bely, so y the hefte wente in also after the blade, a the fatt closed the hefte: for he drue not ý dagger out of his bely, t 🕏 fylthines departed fro him. But Ehud gat him out at the backe dore, a put to y dore after him, and lockte it.

Now whan he was gone, his seruauntes came in, and sawe that the dore of the Sommer perler was lockte, and they sayde: peraduenture he is gone to the preuve in the syled Sommer perler.

The bi. Chapter.

A ND whan the children of Israel dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, the LORDE delyuered them vnder the hande of the Madianites vij. yeares. And wha the hande of the Madianites was to mightie ouer the children of Israel, the children of Israel made them clyffes in y mountaynes, and caues and holdes, to defende them selues from vMadianites. And whan Israel sowed env thinge, y Madianites and Amalechites, and the children towarde the south came vp vpon them, and pitched their tetes agaynst them, and destroyed the increase of the londe downe vnto Gasa, g let nothinge remayne ouer of the beestes in Israel, nether shepe, ner oxen, ner asses. For they came vp with their catell and tentes, as it had bene a greate multitude of greshoppers (so that nether they ner their camels mighte be nombred) and fell in to the londe, that they mighte destroye it. Thus was Israel exceadinge small before the Madianites. Then cried the children of Israel vnto the LORDE.

B But whan they cried vnto the LORDE because of § Madianites, § LORDE sent thē a prophet, which sayde vnto thē: Thus saieth the LORDE the God of Israel: I caried you out of Egipte,  $\mathfrak{g}$  broughte you out of  $\mathfrak{F}$  house of bondage,  $\mathfrak{g}$  delyuered you from the hande of the Egipcians,  $\mathfrak{g}$  from the hade of all them that oppressed you, and I haue thrust them out before you,  $\mathfrak{g}$  geuen you their lode and sayde vnto you: I am the LORDE youre God. \* Feare not ye the goddes of the Amorites, in whose londe ye dwell: neuertheles ye haue not herkened vnto my voyce.

And there came an angell of the LORDE, g sat him downe vnder an Oke at Aphra, which belonged vnto Ioas the father of  $\hat{y}$ . Esrites, and his sonne Gedeon was throsshinge wheate in the barne, that he mighte flye awaye before the Madianites.

Then appeared vnto him the angell of vLORDE, and sayde vnto him: The LORDE with v thou mightie giaunte. But Gedeon sayde vnto him: Syr, yf the LORDE be with vs, wherfore is all this then happened vnto vs? And where are all the wonders, which oure fathers tolde vs, v sayde: The LORDE brought vs out of Egipte? But now hath the LORDE forsaken vs, and delyuered vs in to the hande of the Madianites.

The LORDE turned him vnto him,  $\mathfrak{g}$ sayde: Go thy waye in this thy strength, thou shalt delyuer Israel out of the hande of  $\mathring{y}$ Madianites. I haue sent the. But he sayde: My LORDE, wherwithall shal I delyuer Israel? Beholde, my kynred is the smallest in Manasse,  $\mathfrak{g}$  I am the leest in my fathers house? The LORDE sayde vnto him: I will be with the, so  $\mathring{y}$  thou shalt smyte the Madianites, euen as though they were but one man.

He sayde vnto him: Yf I haue foude grace 3 in thy sighte, then make me a token, that it is thou, which speakest with me: go not awaye, tyll I come to ŷ, and brynge a meatofferynge, to set before the. He sayde: I wyll tary, tyll thou comest agayne. And Gedeon wete, and made ready a kydd, and an Epha of vnleuended floure, and layed the flesh in a maunde, and put the broth in a pot, and broughte it forth vnto him vnder the Oke, and came nye. But the angell of God sayde vnto him: † Take the flesh and the vnleuended bred, a set it vpon the stonye rocke that is here, and poure the broth theron. And he dyd so. Then the angell of the LORDE cite at Aphra. And all Israel wente there a whoringe after it, and it turned to an occasion of fallinge vnto Gedeon and his house.

Thus were y Madianites brought downe before the children of Israel, and lifte vp their heade nomore: and the londe was in rest fortye yeares, as loge as Gedeon lyued.

And Ierubaal the sonne of Ioas wete  $\mathfrak{g}$  dwelt in his house. "And Gedeon Had thre score  $\mathfrak{g}$ ten sonnes, which were come out of his thye: for he had many wyues. And his concubyne which he had at Siche, bare him a sonne also, whom he called Abimelech. And Gideon the sonne of Ioas dyed in a good age,  $\mathfrak{g}$  was buried at Aphra in  $\mathfrak{F}$  sepulcre of his father Ioas the father of the Esrites.

But whan Gedeon was deed, the childre of Israel turned backe, and wente awhoringe after Baalim, and made a couenaunt with Baal Berith,  $\dot{y}$  he shulde be their God. And  $\dot{y}$ childre of Israel thoughte not on  $\dot{y}$  LORDE their God, which had delyuered them fro the hande of their enemies rounde aboute: and they shewed not mercy vnto the house of Ierubaal Gedeon, acordinge to all the good that he had done vnto Israel.

The ir. Chapter

BIMELECH the sonne of Ierubaal, wente vnto Sichē to his mothers brethren,  $\mathfrak{g}$  spake vnto them,  $\mathfrak{g}$  to all the kynred of his mothers fathers house, and sayde: I praye you speake in the eares of all the men at Sichem: What is better for you, that thre score and ten men all children of Ierubaal shulde be lordes ouer you, or that one man shulde be lorde ouer you? Remembre also that I am youre bone and youre flesh.

Then spake his mothers brethrē all these wordes for him, in  $\mathring{y}$  eares of all  $\mathring{y}$  men at Sichem. And their hert enclyned to Abimelech, for they thoughte: He is oure brother: and gaue him thre score and ten syluerlinges out of  $\mathring{y}$  house of Baal Berith. And with them Abimelech hyred men that were vagabundes and of light condicions, which folowed him. And he came to his fathers house vnto Aphra, and slew his brethren the children of Ierubaal,<sup>6</sup> euen thre score men and tē vpon one stone. But Iotham the yongest sonne of Ierubaal remayned ouer, for he was hydd. And all the men of Sichem, and all the house of Millo gathered them selues together, and wente and made Abimelech kynge by the Oke that stondeth at Sichem.

Whan this was tolde Iotham, he wente, and 33 stode vpon the toppe of mount Grisim, and lifte vp his voyce, cried, and sayde: Heare me ye men of Sichem, that God maye heare you also. * The trees wente to anointe a kinge ouer them, and sayde vnto the Olyue tre: Be thou oure kynge. But the Olyue tre answered them: Shall I go and leaue my fatnesse (which both God and men commende in me) and go to be puft vp aboue the trees? Then sayde the trees vnto the fygge tre: Come thou and be kynge ouer vs. But the fygge tre sayde vnto thē: Shal I leaue my swetnes and my good frute, and go to be puft vp aboue the trees? Then sayde the trees vnto the vyne: Come thou and be oure kinge. But the vyne sayde vnto them: Shal I leaue my swete wyne, which reioyseth God and men, and go to be puft vp aboue the trees? The sayde all the trees vnto the thorne buszshe: Come thou, and be kynge ouer vs. And the thorne buszshe sayde vnto the trees: Yf it be true, y ye anoynte me to be kynge ouer you, the come, and put youre trust vnder my shadowe. Yf no, then go fyre out of the thorne buszshe, g cosume y Ceder trees of Libanō.

Yf ye haue done right now and iustly,  $\frac{1}{y}$  ye haue made Abimelech to be kynge: and yf ye haue done well vnto Ierubaal and to his house, and haue done vnto him as he deserued vnto you. Yf ye haue done right now and iustly vnto Ierubaal and his house this daye, then reioyse ouer Abimelech, and let him reioyse ouer you. Yf no, then go fyre out from Abimelech, and cōsume the men of Sichem and the house of Millo: And fyre go out also frō the men of Sichem, and from the house of Millo, and consume Abimelech. And Iothā (whan he had spoken this out) fled, and gat him out of dyed thorow the smoke and fyre, vpon a thousande men and wemen.

As for Abimelech, he wete vnto Thebetz, 獌 and layed sege vnto it, and wanne it. But in the myddes of the cite, there was a stronge tower, vnto the which all the men and wemen, and all the citesyns of the cite fled, and shutt it after them, and clymmed vp to the toppe of the tower. Then came Abimelech vnto the tower, and foughte agaynst it, and came nye vnto the dore of the tower, that he might burne it with fyre. *But a woman cast a pece of a mylstone vpon Abimelechs heade, and brake his brane panne. Then Abimelech in all the haist, called the seruaunt that bare his wapen, and sayde vnto him : Drawe out thy swerde," and kyll me, that it be not sayde of me: A woman hath slayne him. Then his seruaunt thrust him thorow, and he dyed. Whan the Israelites which were with him, sawe, V Abimelech was deed, they gatt them awaye euery one vnto his awne place.

Thus God recompenced Abimelech the euell that he had done vnto his father, whā he slewe his thre score and ten brethren: like wyse all the euell of the men of Sichem, dyd God rewarde them vpon their heade: and so the +curse of Iotham  $\frac{1}{7}$  sonne of Ierubaal came vpon them.

FTER Abimelech there rose vp another sauioure in Israel, Thola a man of Isachar, and the sonne of Pua, the sonne of Dodo. And he dwelt at Samir vpō the mount Ephraim, and iudged Israel thre and twentye yeare, and died, and was buried at Samir.

After him stode vp one Iair a Gileadite, and iudged Israel two and twentye yeare, and had thirtie sonnes,‡ rydinge vpon thirtie asses foales: and had thirtie cities, whose names are Hauoth Iair (that is, the cities of Iair) vnto this daye, and lye in Gilead. And Iair dyed, and was buried at Camon.

But the children of Israel wrought wickednes in the sighte of the LORDE, and serued Baalim and Astaroth, and the goddes of Siria, and the goddes of Sidon, and the goddes of Moab, and the goddes of § children of Ammon, and the goddes of the Philistines, and forsoke § LORDE, and serued him not. Then was $ wrath of $ LORDE fearce vpon Israel, and he gaue the ouer vnder the hade of the Philistynes, and of the children of Ammo. And they vexed and oppressed $ children of Israel eightene yeare longe, all the children of Israel that were beyonde Iordane in the londe of the Moabites, which lyeth in Gilead. The children of Ammon also wente ouer Iordane, and fought agaynst Iuda, Ben Iamin, and agaynst the house of Ephraim, so that Israel was very sore troubled.

Then cryed the children of Israel vnto the LORDE, and sayde: We have synned agaynst the, for we have forsaken oure God,  $\mathfrak{T}$  serued Baalim. But the LORDE sayde vnto the childrē of Israel: Did not the Egipciās, the Amorites, the children of Ammon,  $\mathfrak{F}$  Philistines, the Sidonians, the Amalechites and Maonites oppresse you, and I helped you out of their hande, whan ye cryed vnto me? Yet have ye forsaken me, and serued other goddes? Therfore wyll I helpe you nomore. GO youre waye, and crye vpon the goddes whom ye have chosen, let them helpe you in the tyme of youre trouble.

But the childre of Israel sayde vnto the LORDE: We have synned, do thou vnto vs what pleaseth the, onely delyuer vs at this tyme. And they put the straunge goddes fro them, and served the LORDE, And his soule had pytie on the mysery of Israel.

And the children of Ammon called them selues together, and pitched in Gilead: But the children of Israel gathered them selues together also, and pitched at Mispa. And § people of the chefest of Gilead sayde amoge them selues: Who so euer begynneth to fight agaynst the children of Ammon, shalbe heade ouer all them that dwell in Gilead.

But Samson laye vnto mydnighte, then rose he at mydnighte,  $\mathfrak{g}$  toke holde on both  $\mathfrak{f}$  syde portes of  $\mathfrak{f}$  gate of the cite, with both the postes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  lifte them out with the barres,  $\mathfrak{g}$  layed them vpon his shulders,  $\mathfrak{g}$  bare them vp to  $\mathfrak{f}$  toppe of  $\mathfrak{f}$  mount ouer agaynst Hebron.

After this he fell in to the loue of a woman by § broke of Sorek, whose name was Dalila, vnto whom the prynces of the Philistynes 13 came vp, and sayde vnto her: Persuade him, and loke wherin he hath soch greate stregth, a how we maye ouercome him, y we mighte bynde him g subdue him, so wyll we geue the euery man a M. and an C. syluerlinges. And Dalila sayde vnto Samson: I praye the tell me, wherin thy greate strength is, a how thou mightest be bounde to be subdued. Samson sayde vnto her: Yf I were bounde with seuë roapes of fresh senowes, which are not yet dryed vp, I shulde be weake, and as another man. The the prynces of the Philistynes broughte vp vnto her seuen new roapes, which were not yet dryed vp. And she bounde him therwith. (But there was wayte layed for him besyde her in the chamber) and she sayde vnto him: The Philistynes vpon the Samson. Neuertheles he brake the roapes in sunder, euē as a twyned threde breaketh, whan it hath catched the heate of the fyre. And it was not knowne wherin his strength was.

Then sayde Dalila vnto Samson : beholde,  $\mathcal{C}$ thou hast begyled me  $\mathfrak{c}$  dyssembled with me : tell me yet, wherwithall mayest thou be bounde? He answered her: Yf they bounde me with new coardes, wherwith no laboure hath bene done, I shulde be feble,  $\mathfrak{c}$  as another man. Then toke Dalila new coardes,  $\mathfrak{c}$ bounde him withall, and sayde : The Philistynes vpō the Samson (but there was wayte layed for him in the chamber.) And he brake them from his armes, euen as it had bene a threde.

Dalila sayde vnto him: Yet hast thou begyled me g dessembled with me: O tell me yet, wherwithall mightest thou be bounde? He answered her: Yf thou playtest seuë hayrie lockes of my heade together in a fyllet, and fastenest them in with a nayle (I shulde be weake.) And she saide vnto him: The Philistynes vpö the Samson. But he awaked out of his slepe, g drue out ŷ playted hayrie lockes with the nale and the fyllet.

same wente out of the cite of Bethleem Iuda, to walke whither he coulde.

And what he came vp to mount Ephraim C vnto the house of Micha, to go on his iourney, Micha axed him : Whence comest thou? He answered him : I am a Leuite of Bethleem luda, and am walkynge where I can. Micha sayde vnto him: Tary with me, thou shalt be my father and my prest, I will geue the euery yeare ten syluerlinges and thy appoynted raymet, and meate and drynke: and the Leuite wete on. And the Leuite agreed to abyde with the man: and he helde the yonge ma, as one of his owne sonnes. And Micha fylled the Leuites hande, that he mighte be his prest, and so he was in Michas house. And Micha sayde: I am sure the LORDE wyll do me good now, that I haue a Leuite to my prest.

The rbiij. Chapter.

T that tyme was there no kynge in Israel. And y trybe of y Danites soughte them an enheritaunce to dwell in, * for vnto that daie there was no enheritaunce fallen vnto them amonge the trybes of Israel. And the childre of Dan sent out of their kynreds fyue captaynes (which were men of armes) from Zarga and Esthaol, to spye and search out the londe. And they sayde vnto them : Go youre waie, and search out the londe. And they came vp to mount Ephraim in to y house of Micha, and taried there all nighte. And whyle they were there with Michas huszsholde, they knewe voyce of the yonge man the Leuite, and sayde vnto him: Who broughte § hither? What makest thou here? and why woldest thou come hither?

He answered the: Thus  $\mathfrak{g}$  thus hath Micha done vnto me,  $\mathfrak{g}$  hath hyred me to be his prest. They sayde vnto him: O axe at God,  $\mathfrak{f}$  we maye perceaue, whether oure iourney which we go, shal prospere well or not. The prest answered them: Go youre waye in peace, youre iourney  $\mathfrak{f}$  ye go, is before the LORDE. Then the fyue men wente their waye,  $\mathfrak{g}$  came vnto Lais, and sawe that the people which was therin, dwelt sure, euen as  $\mathfrak{f}$  Sidonians, at rest, and carelesse, and that there was no lorde in the londe to vexe them, and were farre from the Sidonians, and had nothinge to do with leny man. And they came to their brethre to Zarga  $\mathbb{C}$ and Esthaol. And their brethren saide vnto them: How is it with you? They sayde: Arise, let vs go vp vnto them, for we haue sene the londe,  $\dot{y}$  it is a very good londe: make haist therfore,  $\mathfrak{g}$  be not slacke to go, that ye maye come to take possession of the londe. Whan ye come, ye shall come to a carelesse people, and the londe is wyde: for God hath delyuered this place in to youre hande, where nothinge wanteth of all  $\dot{y}$  is vpon earth.

Then wente there thence out of the kynreds of Dan from Zarga and Esthaol, sixe hundreth men ready wapened to  $\mathring{y}$  battayll, and wente vp, and pitched at Kiriath Iearim in Iuda: therfore called they the same place,  $\mathring{y}$  hoost of Dan, vnto this daye, which is behinde Kiriath Iearim.

And fro thence they wete vp vnto mout B Ephraim, and came to the house of Micha. Then answered the fyue men that wete out to spye the londe of Lais, g sayde vnto their brethren: Knowe ye not that in these houses there is an ouerbody cote, Idols, a molten ymages? Now maye ye loke what ye haue to They departed thence, and came to the do. house of the yonge man the Leuite in Michas house, and saluted him fredly. But the sixe hundreth men, which were of § children of Dan, stode ready harnessed before ŷ gate. And the fyue men that were gone out to spye y londe, wete vp, and came thither, and toke the ymage, the ouerbody cote, a the molten Idols. In the meane whyle stode y prest at the gate, with the sixe hundreth readye harnessed.

Now what these were come in to Michas house, and toke the ymage, the ouerbody cote, and the molten Idols, the prest sayde vnto them: What do ye? They answered him: Holde thy peace, and laye thine hande vpon thy mouth, and go with vs,  $\frac{1}{y}$  thou mayest be oure father g prest. Is it better for the to be prest in one mans house, then amonge a whole trybe g kynred in Israel? This pleased the prest well, g he toke both the ouerbody cote, and the Idols, and the ymage, and came in amonge the people. And whan they turned them and wente thence, they sent their children, and catell, and soch precious thynges as they had, before them.

Whan they were come farre now from the  $\mathcal{F}$  house of Micha, the mon  $\dot{\mathcal{F}}$  were in Michas houses gathered the together by Michas house, a folowed & childre of Dan, and cried vpon the childre of Dan. They turned their faces aboute, and sayde vnto Micha: What ayleth the, t thou makest soch a crienge? He answered : Ye haue taken awaye my goddes, and the prest, g are goinge youre waie, and what haue I behynde? What is here? And yet ye saye vnto me: What ayleth the? But the childre of Dan saide vnto him: Let not thy voyce be herde amoge vs, that some wrothfull me thrust not at the, and so thy soule and the soule of thy house be destroyed. So the childre of Dan wete on their waye. And Micha, whan he sawe y they were to stronge for him, turned backe, and came agayne to his house.

But they toke that Micha had made, g the prest whom he had, g came vnto Lais, to a quyete carelesse people, and slewe them with the edge of the swerde, and burnt the cite with fyre, and there was no man to delyuer them: for they laye farre frō Sidon, and had to do with no man. And they laye in the valley, which is besyde Beth Rehob. Then buylded they the cite, g dwelt therin, *g called it Dan, after the name of their father Dan, whom Israel begat. And ŷ cite was called Lais afore tyme.

And the children of Dan set vp the ymage for them, and Ionathan  $\mathring{y}$  sonne of Gerson the sonne of Manasse,  $\mathfrak{g}$  his sonnes were prestes amöge the trybe of  $\mathring{y}$  Danites,  $\dagger$  vnto the tyme  $\mathring{y}$  they were led awaye captyue out of the londe. And thus they set amonge the the ymage of Micha, which he had made, as loge as  $\mathring{y}$  house of God was at Silo.

T the same tyme was there no kynge in Israel, and there was a man of Leui, which was a straūger besyde moūt Ephraim, and had taken him a cōcubine of Bethleem Iuda to wife. And whā she had played the harlot besyde him, she ranne frō him to hir fathers house vnto Bethleem Iuda,  $\mathfrak{q}$  was there foure monethes longe. And hir huszbāde gat him vp,  $\mathfrak{q}$  wente after her, to speake frēdly with her,  $\mathfrak{q}$  to fetch her againe,  $\mathfrak{q}$  had a seruaunt  $\mathfrak{q}$  a couple of asses with him. And she led him in to hir fathers house. But whan the damsels father sawe him, he was glad,  $\mathfrak{g}$  receaued him :  $\mathfrak{g}$  his father in lawe,  $\hat{\mathfrak{y}}$  damsels father kepte him, so  $\check{\mathfrak{y}}$  he taried thre dayes with him: thus they ate and droke, and remayned there all nighte.

But on  $\hat{y}$  fourth daye he gat him vp early, 33a wolde go his waye. Then sayde  $\hat{y}$  damsels father vnto his sonne in lawe: ‡ Refresh thine hert first with a morsell of bred, and then shal ye go. And they sat them downe,  $\mathfrak{g}$  ate and dronke both together: Then sayde the damsels father vnto the man: Oh tarye all nighte,  $\hat{y}$  we maie refresh thine hert. But  $\hat{y}$ mā arose,  $\mathfrak{g}$  wolde nedes go. And his father in lawe constrayned him to tarye all nighte. On the fifth daye in the mornynge he gat him vp, and wolde be gone. Then sayde the damsels father: I praye the comforte thine hert,  $\mathfrak{g}$  let vs tary tyll  $\hat{y}$  daye be farther past, and so they ate both together.

And the man gat him vp, and wolde go with his concubyne and with his seruaunt. But his father in lawe the damsels father, saide vnto him agayne: Lo, the daye is spente, g it begynneth to be euen, tary all night: beholde, here is lodginge yet this daye, abyde here this night, it shal refresh thine hert: tomorow by times get you vp, and go youre waye vnto thy tent. Neuertheles the man wolde not tary, but gat him vp, g wête his waye, and came ouer agaynst Iebus (that is Ierusalem) and his couple of asses ladē, and his concubyne with him.

Now whan they were come nye vnto Iebus, the daye fell fast awaye. And y seruaūt saide vnto his master : I praie you go on, and let vs turne in to this cite of the lebusites, Notwithstondinge 🖽 and tarye therin allnight. his master sayde vnto him: I wil not turne in to y cite of the aleauntes, that are not of the children of Israel, but I wyl go ouer vnto Gibea. And he sayde vnto his seruaūt: Go thou before, that we may come to some place, and tarye at Gibea or at Ramah allnight. And they wente on and walked, and the Sonne wente downe vpon the harde by Gibea, which lyeth in the trybe of Ben Iamin: and they turned in there, y they mighte come in, and tarve at Gibea all nighte. But whan he came in, he sat him downe in § strete of the cite: for there was noman that wolde lodge them in his house that night.

And whan he lifte vp his eies, a sawe the straunger in the strete he sayde vnto him : Whither wilt thou go? g whence comest thou? He answered him: We are goinge on oure iourney from Bethlee Iuda, vntyll we come besyde mount Ephraim, whece I am, and wente vnto Bethleem Iuda, and now I go vnto ŷ house of ŷ LORDE no mā wil harbarow me. We haue strawe and proueder for oure asses, and bred and wyne for me and thy handmayden, and for the yonge man which is with thy seruaunt, so y we wante nothinge.

The olde man sayde: Peace be with the: what soeuer thou wantest, thou findest it with me, onely tarye not in the strete all nighte. And he broughte him in to his house, and gaue the asses prouender: and they washed their fete, and ate a dronke. And whā their hert was now ioyfull, the men of the cyte, the children of Belial, came, and compased the house rounde aboute, and ruszshed at  $\hat{y}$  dore, and sayde vnto  $\hat{y}$  olde man, which was the good man of  $\hat{y}$  house: Bringe out the mā which is come in to thy house, that we maye knowe him.

*But the good man of the house wente forth to them, and sayde vnto them: Oh no my brethren, do not so wickedly, consideringe this man is come in to my house: Oh do not soch folye. Beholde, I haue a doughter yet a virgin, and this man hath a cocubine, those wil I brynge forth vnto you, that ye maye humble them, and do with them as ye lyke: but do not soch foly vnto this man. Neuertheles the men wolde not herken vnto him. Then toke y man his concubine and broughte her forth vnto them: and they knewe her, and dealte shamefully with her all y night vntill the mornynge. And whan the mornynge brake on, they let her go.

Then came the woman early in the mornynge, and fell downe at the dore of the mas house that her lorde was in, and laye there tyll it was light. holde. He saide vnto her : stonde vp, let vs go. Neuertheles she gaue him no answere. Thē toke he her vp vpon his asse, gat him vp, and wente vnto his place.

Now whan he came home, he toke a swerde, and helde his concubyne, and cut her with the bones and all in to twolue peces, and sent them in to all the coastes of Israel. Who so euer sawe it, sayde: Soch a thinge hath not bene done ner sene, sence the tyme that  $\hat{y}$ children of Israel departed out of the londe of Egipte, vnto this daye. Now as concernynge this, take youre advysement, and geue youre councell, and shew it forth.

The rr. Chapter.

THEN wente the children of Israel out and gathered a congregacion together as one man, frō Dan vntill Bersaba, and from the londe of Gilead vnto the LORDE to Mispa: and there came together of all the quarters of the people, and of all the trybes of Israel in to the congregacion of the people of God, foure hundreth thousande fote men that drue out  $\hat{y}$  swerde. But the children of Ben Iamin herde, how that  $\hat{y}$  children of Israel were gone vp vnto Mispa. And the children of Israel sayde: Tell vs, how happened this euell?

Then answered the Leuite the huszbande of the woman that was slayne, and sayde: I came to Gibea in Ben Iamin with my concubyne, to tary there allnight, then the cytesins of Gibea gat them vp agaynst me, and compased me aboute in the house by night, and thoughte to slaye me, and defyled my cōcubyne, so that she dyed: then toke I my cōcubyne, and cut her in peces, and sent the peces in to euery countre of the inheritaunce of Israel: for they haue done an abhominacion and folye in Israel. Beholde, here are ye children of Israel: aduyse you well, and take this matter in hande.

So all the people gat them vp as one mā, and sayde : Nomā shal go in to his tente, ner departe to his house, but this wil we do now agaynst Gibea : Let vs cast lot, and take ten men of an hundreth, and an hundreth of a thousande, and a thousande of ten thousande, out of all § trybes of Israel, § they maie take fode for § people, to come g do with Gibea Ben Iamin, acordynge to their folye which they haue done in Israel. Thus all the men of Israel beynge confederate, gathered them selues together as one man vnto the cite: and the trybes of Israel sent men vnto all the kinreds of Ben Iamin, and caused to saye vnto them: What maner of wickydnes is this, that is done amonge you? Delyuer here therfore the men the children of Belial at Gibea, that we maye put them to death, and do awaye the euell out of Israel. Neuertheles the children of Ben Iamin wolde not folowe the voyce of their brethren the children of Israel, but gathered them selues out of § cities vnto Gibea, to go forth in battayll agaynst the children of Israel.

And the same daye were there nombred of C the children of Ben Iamin out of the cities, sixe and twentye thousande men, that drue the swerde, beside the citesyns of Gibea of whom there were tolde seue hundreth chosen men. And amoge all this people there were chosen out seuen hundreth men, which vsed not the right hande but the lefte, and yet with the slynge coulde they touch an heer, and not mysse. But the men of Israel, beside them of Be Iamin, were nobred foure hudreth thousande, which drue the swerde, a were all men of armes. And the children of Israel arose, and wente vp to the house of God (in Silo) and axed at God, and sayde: Who shall go vp for vs to beginne the battayll with y children of Ben Iamin? The LORDE saide: Iuda shall begynne.

So the children of Israel gat the vp in  $\hat{y}$ mornīge, g pitched ouer agaīst Gibea, g euery man of Israel wëte out to fighte with Ben Iamin, and set them selues in araye to fighte agaynst Gibea. Then fell the children of Ben Iamin out of Gibea, and slewe the same daye amonge Israel two g twentye thousande to the grounde.

But the people of the men of Israel comforted them selues, and made them ready to fighte yet more in the same place, after they had prepared them selues the daye afore. And the children of Israel wente vp, and wepte before the LORDE vntyll the euenynge, and axed at the LORDE, g sayde: Shall we go eny more to fighte with oure brethren the children of Ben Iamin? The LORDE sayde: Go vp vnto them. And whan the children of Israel gat them vp to the childrē of Ben Iamin on ŷ next daye, the Ben Iamites fell out of Gibea agaynst them the same daye, and slewe yet eightene thousande of  $\hat{\mathbf{y}}$  children of Israel to the grounde, which all drue the swerde.

Then wente all the children of Israel vp, and all the people, and came to the house of God, and wepte, and taried there before the LORDE,  $\mathfrak{q}$  fasted that daye vntyll the euen, and offred burntofferynges and deedofferinges before the LORDE. And the children of Israel axed at the LORDE (the Arke of the couenaunt of God was there at that tyme, and Phineas the sonne of Eleasar the sonne of Aaron stode before him at the same tyme)  $\mathfrak{q}$ they sayde: Shal we go forth eny more to fighte with oure brethren the childre of Ben Iamin, or shal we leaue of? The LORDE sayde: Go vp, tomorow wyll I delyuer them in to youre handes.

And the children of Israel set a preuv watch E agaynst Gibea rounde aboute, and so the children of Israel wente vp to the children of Ben Iamin on the thirde daye, and set them selues in araye agaynst Gibea like as the other two tymes afore. The came the children of Ben Iamin out agaynst the people, g brake out of the cite, g beganne to slaye certayne wounded of the people (like as the other two times afore) in the felde vpon two stretes: wherof one goeth towarde Bethel, the other vnto Gilead vpon a thirtye men in Israel. Then thought the childre of Ben Iamin: They are smytten before vs like as afore. But the childre of Israel sayde: Let vs flye, that we maie prouoke them out of the cite in to the hye stretes.

Then all the men of Israel gat them vp from their place, and prepared them selues vnto Baal Thamar. And the hinder watch of Israel brake out of their place, from § caue of Gaba, and came vnto Gibea, twentye thousande chosen men out of all Israel, so that it was a sore battayll: but they knewe not that the euell shulde happen vnto them. Thus the LORDE smote Ben Iamin before the children of Israel, so that the same daye the children of Israel destroyed fyue a twentye thousande and an hundreth men in Ben Iamin, which all drue the swerde.

For whan the childre of Ben Iamin sawe Jthat they were smitten, the men of Israel gaue them rowme (to flye). For they trusted to the watch, which they had sett by Gibea. And the watch made haist also,  $\mathfrak{g}$  brake forth

THE men of Israel had swore at Mispa, and suyde: Norman shall be a ball A suyde: Noman shal geue his doughter to the Ben lamites to wife. And the people came to the house of God (in Silo) g abode there before God vntill the euenynge, and lifte vp their voyce, and wepte sore, and sayde:

* Num, 31. c.

O LORDE God of Israel, wherfore is this come to passe in Israel this daye? But on the morow the people gat the vp early, and builded there an altare, and offred burntofferinges and deedofferynges.

And the children of Israel sayde: Where is there eny mā of the trybes of Israel, that is not come vp with the congregacion vnto the LORDE? For there was a greate ooth made, that who so came not vp to Mispa vnto the LORDE, shulde dye the deeth. And the children of Israel were sory for Ben Iamin their brother, and sayde: This daye is there one trybe lesse in Israel. How wyll we do that the remnaunt maye haue wyues? For we have sworne by the LORDE, that we wyl B not geue the wyues of oure doughters. And they saide: Where is there eny mā of the trybes of Israel, that is not come vp to the LORDE vnto Mispa? And beholde, there was not one man of the citesyns of Iabes in Gilead.

Then sent the congregacion twolue thousande men of armes thither, and commaunded them, and sayde: Go youre waye, and smite the citesyns of Iabes in Gilead with the swerde, the wemen also and the children, but so that ye do after this maner: *Se that ye damne all them that are males, and all the wemen that haue lyen with men. And amonge the citesins of Iabes in Gilead they found foure hundreth damsels, which were virgins, and had lyen with noman: those they broughte in to the hoost vnto Silo, which lyeth in the londe of Canaan.

Then sent the whole congregacion, "and C caused to talke with the children of Ben Iamin, which were in the stonie rocke of Rimo and called vnto them frendly. So the children of Ben Iamin came agayne at the same tyme, and they gaue them wemen which they had of the wemen of Iabes in Gilead, and founde no mo after that maner. Then were the people sory for Ben Iamin, that y LORDE had made a gappe in the trybes of Israel. And the Elders of the congregacio sayde: What wil we do, that the reinnaunt maye haue wyues also? for the weme in Ben lamin are destroied. and they sayde : The enheritaunce of them of Ben Iamin that are escaped, must nedes remayne, that there be not a trybe destroyed out of Israel: g we can not geue them oure

And as they wete by the waye to come agayne in to the londe of Iuda, she sayde vnto both hir sonnes wyues: Go youre waye, g turne backe ether of you to hir mothers house: the LORDE shewe mercy vpon you, as ye haue done on the y are deed g on me. The LORDE graunte you, y ye maie fynde rest ether of you in hir huszbädes house (whom ye shal get) and she kyssed them.

Then lift they vp their voyce, and wepte, a sayde vnto her: We wil go with the vnto thy people. But Naemi sayde: Turne agayne my doughters, why wolde ye go with me? How can I haue children eny more in my body, to be youre huszbandes? Turne agayne my doughters, and go youre waye, for I am now to olde to take an huszbande.

C And though I shulde saye: I hope this night to take an huszbande q to brynge forth children, yet coulde ye not tary till they were growne vp: for ye shulde be to olde, so that ye coulde hnue no huszbandes. No my doughters, therfore am I sory for you, for  $\mathring{\mathbf{y}}$  hade of the LORDE is gone forth ouer me.

Then lifte they vp their voyce, and wepte yet more, and Arpa kyssed hir mother in lawe (and turned backe againe) but Ruth abode styll by her. Neuertheles she sayde: Beholde, thy syster in lawe is turned backe vnto hir people and to hir god, turne thou againe also after thy sister in lawe. Ruth answered : Speake not to me therof, that I shulde forsake the, and turne backe from the : whither so cuer thou goest, thither wil I go also: and loke where thou abydest, there wil I abide also: Thy people is my people, a thy God is my God. Loke where thou diest, there wil I dye, and euen there wil I also be buried. The LORDE do this and that vnto me, death onely shal departe vs.

Now whan she sawe, that she was stedfastly mynded to go with her, she spake nomore to her therof. So they wente on both together, till they came vnto Bethleem. And whan they were come in to Bethleem, the whole cite was noused ouer them, and sayde : Is not this Naemi? Neuerthelesse she sayde vnto them : call me not Naemi, but Mara : for the Allmightie hath made me very sory. I departed full, but the LORDE hath brought me home agayne emptye. Why call ye me then Naemi? whā the LORDE hath broughte me lowe, and the Allmightie hath made me sory?

It was aboute the tyme of the begynninge of the barlye haruest, whan Naemi and hir sonnes wife Ruth  $\vartheta$  Moabitysse, came agayne from the londe of the Moabites vnto Bethleem. There was a kinsman also of  $\vartheta$  kynred of Eli Melech Naemis huszbande, whose name was Boos, which was an honest man.

The ij. Chapter.

ND Ruth the Moabitisse saide vnto Naemi: Let me go in to y felde, a gather eares of corne, after him, in whose sight I shal finde fauoure. She sayde vnto her: Go thy waie my doughter. She wete on, g came g gathered after y reapers in y And it fortuned that the same felde feld. was the enheritaunce of Boos, which was of the kynred of Elimelech, and beholde, Boos came from Bethleem, and sayde vnto the reapers: The LORDE be with you. They answered: The LORDE blesse the. And Boos sayde vnto his yongman which had the ouersight of v reapers: Whose damsell is this? The yonge man that was set ouer $ reapers, answered and sayde: It is the damsell the Moabitisse, which came agayne with Naemi from the londe of the Moabites. And B she sayde: Let me plucke vp and gather (1 praie the) betwene the sheues after the reapers: and thus is she come, and hath stonde here euer sence the mornynge, and within a litle whyle she wolde haue bene gone home agayne.

Then sayde Boos vnto Ruth: Hearest thou my doughter? Thou shalt not come vpon another mans londe to gather, and go not awaye from hence, but tary with my dāsels, and loke where they reape in  $\hat{y}$  felde, go thou after them: for I haue comaunded my seruauntes that no man touch the. And yf thou be a thyrst, go thy waye to the vessell a drynke, where my seruauntes drawe. Then fell she downe vpon hir face, and bowed hir self downe to the earth, and sayde vnto him: How haue I founde this fauoure in thy sighte, that thou woldest knowe me, which am yet a straunger?

Boos answered and sayde vnto her: It is tolde me alltogether, what thou hast done vnto thy mother in lawe after thy huszbādes death, how that thou hast left thy father and thy mother, and thy natiue countre, and art come to a people, whom thou hast not knowne afore. The LORDE recompence the thy doinge, and thy rewarde be parfecte with the LORDE God of Israel, vnto whom thou art come to put thy trust vnder his wynges. She sayde: let me fynde fauoure (syr) before thyne eyes, for thou hast comforted me, and spoken frendly vnto thy handmaydē, where as I am not yet like one of thy handmaydēs.

Boos sayde vnto her: Whan it is eatinge tyme, come hither, and eate of the bred, and dyppe thy morsell in the vyneger. And she sat hir downe besyde the reapers. And he set parched corne before her, and she ate, g was satisfyed, and lefte ouer. And whā she rose to gather, Boos commaunded his seruauntes, and sayde: Let her gather betwene the sheues also, and do her no dishonestye: and cast of the sheues vnto her, and let it lye that she maye gather it vp, and se that noman reproue her for it.

So she gathered in the felde vntyll euen and she shaked out what she had gathered, and it was allmost an Epha of barlye: and she toke it vp, and came in to the cite, and shewed hir mother in lawe what she had gathered. She toke forth also, and gaue her of that which was left, wherof she was satysfyed. Thē sayde hir mother in lawe vnto her: Blessinge haue the man that hath knowne the, where thou hast gathered and laboured this daye.

Æ She tolde hir mother in lawe by whom she had laboured, and sayde: The mans name, by whom I have wroughte to daye, is Boos. Naemi sayde vnto hir doughter in lawe: The blessynge of the LORDE haue he, for he hath not lefte of to be mercifull vnto the lyuynge * and to the deed. And Naemi sayde vnto her: The same man belongeth vnto vs, and is oure nye kynsman. Ruth the Moabitisse saide : He saide morouer vnto me : Thou shalt resorte vnto my seruauntes, tyll they have made an ende of all my harvest. Naemi sayde vnto Ruth hir doughter in lawe: It is better my doughter, that thou go forth with his damsels, lest eny man withstode the Thus she kepte herselfe in another felde. with Boos damsels, so that she gathered vntill the barlye haruest and the wheate haruest was out, and came againe to hir mother in lawe.

The iij. Chapter.

ND Naemi hir mother in lawe sayde vnto her: My doughter, I wyll prouyde rest for the, that thou maiest prospere. Boos oure kynsman, by whose damsels thou hast bene, casteth vp barlye now this night in his barne. Bathe thyselfe therfore, and †moffell the, and put on thy clothes, and go downe vnto the barne, so y nomā knowe the, tyll they haue all eaten and dronken.

Whan he layeth him downe then to sleape, mark  $\oint$  place where he lyeth downe, and come thou, and take vp the couerynge at his fete, and laye the downe, so shall he tell the what thou shalt do. She sayde vnto her: what so euer thou saiest vnto me, I wil do it.

She wente downe to the barne,  $\mathfrak{g}$  dyd all as hir mother in lawe had cōmaunded her. And whā Boos had eatē  $\mathfrak{g}$  dronkē, his hert was mery,  $\mathfrak{g}$  he came and layed him downe behynde a heape of sheues. And she came secretly, and toke vp the coueringe at his fete, and layed hir downe. Now whā it was midnight, the man was afrayed, and groped aboute him, and beholde, a woman laye at his fete. And he sayde: Who art thou? She answered: I am Ruth thy handmayden, sprede thy wynges ouer thy hādmayden: for thou art the nexte kynsman.

He sayde: The LORDES blessinge haue thou my doughter. Thou hast done a better mercy here after then before, y thou art not gone after yonge men, nether riche ner poore. Feare not now my doughter: All y thou hast sayde, will I do for the : for all the cite of my people knoweth, y thou art a vertuous womā. Trueth it is now, y I am a nye kynsmā, but there is one nyer then I. Tarye thou allnighte. Tomorow yf he take the, well: yf he like not to take ŷ, then wil I take ŷ my selfe, as truly as § LORDE lyueth. Slepe thou tyll y mornynge. And she slepte at his fete vntyll ý morow. And she rose vp or euer 🔁 one coulde knowe another. And he thoughte thus: That no mā knowe now ý there hath come a woman in to the barne, and he sayde: Reach me the cloke y thou hast on the, a holde it forth. And she helde it forth.  $\mathbf{And}$ he meet her sixe measures of barlye, and layed it voon her,  $\sigma$  she wente in to the cite, g came to hir mother in lawe, which sayde:

And Eli blessed Elcana c his wife, and sayde: The LORDE geue the sede of this woman, for this good that thou hast lent vnto the LORDE. And they wete vnto their place. And the LORDE vysited Anna, so that she coceaued and bare thre sonnes and two doughters: but the childe Samuel grewe vp with the LORDE.

As for Eli, he was very olde, and herde of all that his sonnes dyd vnto all Israel, and how they laye with the wemen that serued God before the dore of the tabernacle of witnesse, and he sayde vnto them: wherfore do ye this? For I heare of youre euell conuersacion of all this people. But the childe Samuel wente and grewe vp, g was accepted of the LORDE g of mē.

There came a man of God to Eli, and J sayde vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I shewed my selfe vnto thy fathers house, whan they were yet in Egipte vnder § house of Pharao, and chose him there vnto my selfe before all the trybes of Israel, for the presthode, that he shulde offer vpon myne altare, and burne incense, and weere the ouerbody cote before me, †and vnto thy fathers house I gaue all the offeringes of the children of Israel. ND whan the childe Samuel mynistred A vnto the LORDE vnder Eli, the worde of VLORDE was deare at the same tyme, nether was there eny sure a manifest vision. And it fortuned at the same tyme, that Eli laye in his place, * and his eyes beganne to be dymme, so that he coulde not se. And Samuel had layed him downe in § temple of the LORDE (where the Arke of God was) before $ lampe of God was put out. And the LORDE called Samuel. He answered : Beholde, here am I. And he ranne vnto Eli, a sayde: Beholde, here am I, thou hast called me. But he saide: I haue not called the, go thy wave agayne, and laye the downe to slepe. And he wente his waye, and layed him downe to slepe.

The LORDE called againe: Samuel. And 跢 Samuel arose, g wente vnto Eli, g sayde: Beholde, here am I, thou hast called me. Neuertheles he sayde: My sonne, I haue not called the. Go thy waye agayne, and laye the downe to slepe. As for Samuel, he knewe not the LORDE as yet, g the worde of \$ LORDE was not yet shewed vnto him. And & LORDE called Samuel y thirde tyme. And he arose, g wente vnto Eli, g sayde : Beholde, here am I, thou hast called me. Then perceaued Eli y the LORDE called y childe, the sayde vnto him: Go thy waye agayne, a laye the downe to slepe: and yf the LORDE call the eny more, then saye: Speake LORDE, for thy seruaunt heareth. Samuel wete his waye, and C layed him downe in his place. The came y LORDE, g stode, and called like as afore: Samuel, Samuel. And Samuel sayde: Speake (LORDE) for thy seruaunt heareth. And the LORDE saide vnto Samuel: Beholde, I do a thinge in Israel, y who so euer shall heare it, both his eares shal glowe. In  $\frac{1}{V}$  daie will I rayse vp vpon Eli t all y I haue spoke cocernynge his house. I will take it in hande, g perfourme it: for I haue tolde him, y I wilbe Iudge ouer his house for euer, because of the wickednes, v he knewe how shamefully his childre behaued the selues, and hath not once loked sowerly therto. Therfore haue I sworne vnto v house of Eli, v this wickednes of y house of Eli shall not be recocyled nether with sacrifice ner with meatoffringe for euer.

And Samuel laye vnto ŷ morow, g opened the dores of the house of the LORDE.

But Samuel was afrayed to tell the vysion vnto Eli. Then Eli called him g sayde: Samuel my sonne. He answered: Beholde, here am I. He sayde: What is ŷ worde ŷ the LORDE hath spokē vnto the? hyde it not fro me. God do this g that vnto ŷ, yf thou hyde oughte fro me, of all that he hath talked with the. Then Samuel tolde him alltogether, g hyd nothinge from him. He sayde: It is the LORDE, let him do what pleaseth him.

Samuel grewe vp,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the LORDE was with him,  $\mathfrak{g}$  there fell none of all his wordes vpō the earth. And all Israel frō Dan vnto Bersaba, knewe  $\frac{1}{2}$  Samuel was faithfull to be a prophet of the LORDE. And the LORDE appeared agayne at Silo: for the LORDE shewed him selfe vnto Samuel at Silo, thorow the worde of the LORDE.

ND all Israel spake of Samuel. And A Israel wente forth to the battayll against the Philistynes, g pitched besyde the ‡Helpe stone: As for the Philistynes, they pitched at Aphek, and prepared them selues agaynst Israel. And whan the battayll beganne, the hoost was deuyded, so that Israel was smytte before the enemies, g in the edge in the felde they slewe aboute a foure thousande men. And whan the people came in to the hoost, the Elders of Israel sayde: Wherfore hath the LORDE caused vs to be smytten this daie before the Philistynes? Whan he had made mencion of the Arke of God, he fell downe bacwarde from the seate by the gate, and brake his neck, and dyed: for he was olde, g an heuy man. He iudged Israel fortie yeares. The wife of his sonne Phineas was with childe, a shulde shortly be delynered, whan she herde the tydinges y the Arke of God was taken, and y hir brother in lawe and hir huszbade were deed, she bowed hir selfe and trauayled: for hir payne came ypon her. And whan she was now at the poynte of death, the wemen that stode by her, sayde : Feare not, thou hast a yoge sonne.

But she gaue no answere, nether regarded it, and she called the childe Icabod, and sayde: The glory is gone from Israel, because the Arke of God was taken awaye, and hir brother in lawe and hir huszbande. And she sayde morouer: The glory is gone from Israel, for the Arke of God is take awaye.

The b. Chapter.

S for the Arke of God, the Philistynes toke it and broughte it from the stone of helpe vnto Aszdod in to the house of Dagon, and set it besyde Dagon. And whan they of Aszdod rose vp early on the morowe, they founde Dagon lyenge on his face vpon the earth, before the Arke of the LORDÉ. But they toke vp Dagon, and set him agayne in his place. # The ir. Chapter.

A HERE was a man of Ben Iamin named * Cis, the sonne of Abiel, the sonne of Zeor, the sonne of Bethorah, y sonne of Apiah, the sonne of a man of Iemini, a valeaunt man, which had a sonne named Saul, which was so goodly a yonge man, that there was not a goodlier amonge the children of Israel, higher by the heade then all the people. Cis the father of Saul had lost his asses, and he sayde vnto Saul his sonne: Take one of the children with the, get the vp, go thy waye, and seke the asses. And he wente his waye thorow mount Ephraim, and thorow the lode of Solisa, and founde them They wente thorow the lode of Saalim, not. g there they were not. They passed thorow ỷ lõde of Iemini, 🛛 foude the not. But whā they came in to the londe of Zuph, Saul sayde vnto the childe that was with him: Come, let vs go home agayne, lest my father let go the asses, and take care for vs. He sayde: Beholde, here is an honorable man of God in this cite, all that he sayeth, commeth to passe. Let vs go thither now, peraduenture he maye shewe vs oure waye which we go. But Saul saide vnto his childe: Though we shulde go, what brynge we the man? For the bred is gone out of oure walet, and els haue we no gifte to brynge the man of God, what haue we? The childe answered agayne, and sayde: Beholde, I haue the fourth parte of a syluer Sycle by me, ŷ same wyll we geue the man of God, that he maye shewe vs oure waye.

(Afore tyme in Israel, whan a man wente B to axe councell at the LORDE, he sayde: Come, let vs go to the Seer: for they that now are called prophetes, were called Seers afore tyme.) Saul sayde vnto his childe: Thou hast well spoken, come let vs go. And whan they wente vnto the cite where the man of God was, and came vp to the cite, they founde damsels which were gone forth to drawe water, vnto them they sayde: Is the Seer here? They answered them and sayde : Yee. Beholde, he is there, make haist, for he came in to the cite this daye, because the people haue a sacrifice to do to daye in the hye place. Whan ye come in the cite, ye shal fynde him, afore he go vp to the hye place for to eate: for the people wyll not eate tyll he come. For he shall blesse the offerynge, then shal they eate that are called. Therfore go youre waie vp, for euē now shal ye finde him.

And whan they came vp to the cite, and C were euen in the myddes of the cite, beholde, Samuel came forth in their waye, and wolde go vp to the hye place. And out of the hoost of the Philistynes there wente thre bondes of men to destroye: one turned the waye towarde Ephra in to the londe of Sual: another turned towarde the waye of Bethoron: the thirde turned towarde the waye, that reacheth to the valley of Zeboim vnto the wyldernes.

But there was not a smyth founde in all the lode of Israel: for  $\mathring{y}$  Philistynes thoughte: The Hebrues mighte happly make swerdes and speares. And all Israel were fayne to go downe to the Philistynes, whan eny man had a plowshare, a mattock, an axe, or a sythe to sharpe: and the edges of the plowshares, and mattockes,  $\mathring{y}$  forckes, and axes, were laboured, and the poyntes blont. Now whan the daye of the battayll came, there was nether swerde ner speare founde in the hande of all the people, that was with Saul and Ionathas: but for Saul and Ionathas his sonne there was somwhat founde. And  $\mathring{y}$  Philistynes watch wete out ouer by Michmas.

The riiij. Chapter.

T fortuned at  $\mathring{y}$  same tyme, y lonathas sayde vnto his lad which was his wapen bearer: Come, let vs go ouer to the Philistynes watch  $\mathring{y}$  lyeth aboue,  $\mathfrak{g}$  he tolde not his father. Saul dwelt at  $\mathring{y}$  ende of Gibea vnder a Pomgranate tre, which was in the suburbe. \$ And the people  $\mathring{y}$  were by him, were vpon a sixe hundreth men. And Ahia the sonne of Achitob the brother of Icabod, the sonne of Phineas  $\mathring{y}$  sonne of Eli  $\mathring{y}$  prest of the LORDE at Silo, wayre the ouerbody cote. But the people knewe not that Ionathas was gone.

Betwene the passages where Ionathas soughte to go ouer vnto the Phylistynes watch, there were two hye rockes, the one on the one syde, the other on the other: the one was called Bozez, the other Senne. And  $\mathring{y}$ one laye on the north syde towarde Michmas, and the other on the south syde towarde Gaba. And Ionathas sayde vnto his wapen bearer:

Come, let vs go ouer to  $\mathring{y}$  watch of these vncircumcised, peraduenture the LORDE shall worke with vs, \*For it is no harde matter for the LORDE to helpe by many or by fewe. Then answered him his wapen bearer: Do all that is in thine hert, go on thy waie, beholde, I am with the, euen as thine hert wyll.

弘 Ionathas sayde: Well than, Whan we are gone ouer to the men, and come within the sighte of them, yf they saye : stonde styll, tyll we come to you, then wyll we stonde styll in oure place, and not go vp to them. But yf they saye: Come vp to vs, we wyll go vp to them, the hath the LORDE delyuered them in to oure hande, and this shalbe a token for vs. Now whan they came both in the sighte of the Philistynes watch, the Philistynes sayde: Se, †§ Hebrues are gone out of their holes, that they were crepte in to. And the men in the watch answered Ionathas and his wapë bearer, and sayde: Come vp to vs, and we wyll teach you what the matter is. Then sayde Ionathas to his weapen bearer. ‡Come vp after me, the LORDE hath delyuered them into Israels hande. And Ionathas clamme vp with handes and fete, and his wapen bearer after him. And Ionathas smote them downe before him, and his wape bearer slewe behynde him, so that the first slaughter that Ionathas and his wapen bearer dyd, was vpo a twentye men, with in the length of halue an aker of londe, which a pare of oxen maye tyll in one daye. C

§ And there came a fearfulnes and flight in the hoost vpon the felde, and amonge all the people of the watch: and vpon the #destroyers there came a fearfulnes also and flight, so that the loude was in a rumoure, and Tthere came a flight thorow God. And Sauls watchmē at Gibea Bē Iamin sawe, that  $\ddagger$  multitude gat them awaye, and ranne to and fro.

Saul sayde vnto the people that was with him: Tell and se which of vs is gone awaye. Vnd whan they nombred, beholde, Ionathas g his wapen bearer was not there. Then saide Saul vnto Ahia: Brynge hither the Arke of Cord (for at that tyme was the Arke of God with the children of Israel.) And whyle Saul was yet speakynge to the prest, the multitude in the Philistynes hoost gat vp, ranne, and was greate. And Saul sayde vnto the prest:

The Hebrues also that were with § Philistynes afore, and had gone vp with them in the hoost on euery syde, ioyned them selues vnto Israel which were with Saul and Ionathas. And all the men of Israel which  $\ddagger$  had hyd thē selues vpon mount Ephraim, whan they herde that the Philistynes fled, folowed after them in the battayll. Thus § LORDE helped Israel at that tyme, and § battayll lasted vnto Bethauen.

And whan the men of Israel came forth, D Saul charged all the people the same daye, and sayde: Cursed be every man, which eateth bred vntyll euen, that I maye auenge me on myne enemies. Then all the people taisted no bred. And all the people of the londe came in to the wodd. But there laye hony vpon the felde: and whan the people came in to the wodd, beholde, the hony flowed, but no man put of it to his mouth with his hade: for the people were afraied because of the ooth. As for Ionathas he had not herde, that his father had charged the people, and he put forth his staff that he had in his handé, and dypped the ende of it in  $\psi$ hony combe, and turned his hande to his mouth, and his eyes were lighted.

Then answered one of the people, and sayde: Thy father hath charged the people, and sayde: Cursed be euery mā that eateth oughte this daye. Neuertheles the people were faynte. Then sayde Ionathas: My father hath troubled the londe: Se how lighte myne eyes are become, because I haue taisted a litle of this hony. Yf the people this daie had eatē of the spoyle of their enemies that they founde, the slaughter shulde haue bene greater agaynst the Philistynes. Yet smote they the Philistynes the same daye fro Michmas vnto Aialon, and the people were very weery.

And \$ people turned to the spoyles, and  $\pounds$  toke shepe and oxen, and calues, and slewe them vpon the earth, ‡‡ and ate them with the bloude. Then was it tolde Saul: Beholde, the people synne agaynst the LORDE, in that they eate bloude. He sayde: Ye have done euell: roll vnto me now a greate stone. And Saul sayde morouer: Go abrode amōge the people, and saye vnto them, that euery one brynge me his oxe and his shepe, and slaye them here, that ye maye eate, and not to synne agaynst the LORDE with eatynge of bloude. Then broughte all the people euery one his oxe with his hāde the same nighte, and slewe them there. And Saul buylded an altare vnto § LORDE. This is the first altare that he buylded vnto the LORDE.

And Saul sayde: Let vs go downe after the Philistynes, by nighte, and spoyle them tyll it be cleare mornynge, that we let none escape. They answered: Do what so euer pleaseth the. But the prest sayde: Let vs go nye here vnto God. And Saul axed at God. Shal I go downe here after § Philistines? g wilt thou delyuer the in to Israels hande? Neuertheles he answered him not at that tyme.

F Then sayde Saul: Let all the armyes of the people come hither, and make search and se, in whom is this synne at this tyme. For as truly as God the Saujoure of Israel lyueth, a though it be in my sonne Ionathas, he shal dye. And no man answered him of all the people. And he sayde vnto all Israel: Be ye on the one syde, I a my sonne Ionathas wyl be on this syde. The people sayde vnto Saul: Do as it pleaseth the. And Saul sayde vnto the LORDE the God of Israel: Do thou that right is. The was Ionathas and Saul taken: but the people wente forth fre. Saul sayde: Cast the lot ouer me and my sonne So Ionathas was take. And Saul Ionathas. sayde vnto Ionathas: Tell me, what hast thou done? Ionathas tolde him, a sayde: I taisted a litle hony with the staff that I had in my hande, and beholde, must I dye therfore? The sayde Saul: God do this and that vnto me, Ionathas thou must dye the death.

But the people sayde vnto Saul: Shulde Ionathas dye, that hath done so greate health in Israel this night? God forbyd. *As truly as the LORDE lyueth, there shal not one heer of his heade fall vpon ŷ earth: for with God hath he wroughte at this tyme. So the people delyuered Ionathas, that he dyed not. Then wente Saul vp from the Philistynes: and the Philistynes wente vnto their place.

But whan Saul had coquered the kyngdome

And he made an hoost, and smote  $\mathring{y}$  + Amalechites, and delyuered Israel from the hande of all those that spoyled them.

Saul had these sonnes: Ionathas, Isui, and Malchisua. And these were  $\mathring{y}$  names of his two doughters: the firstborne Merob,  $\mathring{u}$   $\mathring{y}$ yōgest Michol. And Sauls wife was called Ahinoam, the doughter of Ahimaas. And his chefe captaynes name was Abner, the sonne of Ner, Sauls vncle.  $\ddagger$  Cis was  $\mathring{y}$  father of Saul. But Ner  $\mathring{y}$  father of Abner was the sonne of Abiel.

There was a mightie sore warre against the Philistynes, as loge as Saul lyued. And where Saul sawe a man that was stronge and mete for  $\mathring{y}$  warre, he toke him to him.

whom I have refused, that he shulde not be kynge ouer Israel? Fyll thine horne with oyle, go thy waye, I wyll sende the to Isai the Bethleemite: for amonge his sonnes haue I prouyded me a kynge. But Samuel sayde : How shal I go? Saul shal perceaue it, and shal slaye me. The LORDE sayde : Take the a calfe from the droue, g saye: I am come to do sacrifice vnto y LORDE. And thou shalt call Isai to y sacrifice, so shall I tell the what thou shalt do, that thou mayest anoynte me him, whom I shall shewe the. Samuel dyd as the LORDE sayde, and came to Bethleem. Then were the Elders of the cite astonnyed, and wente forth to mete him, and sayde: * Is thy commynge peaceable? He sayde: Yee. I am come to do sacrifice vnto the LORDE. Sanctifye youre selues, a come with me to the sacrifice. And he sanctified Isai and his sonnes, and called them to the sacrifice.

Б Now wha they came in, he behelde Eliab, g thoughte, whether he shulde be his anoynted before the LORDE. But & LORDE sayde vnto Samuel: loke not vpon his countenaunce, ner vpon the tallnesse of his person, For I iudge not after the sighte of man. A man hath respecte vnto the thinge that is before his eyes, but the LORDE loketh vpon the hert. Then Isai called Abinadab, a broughte him before Samuel. And he sayde: This hath not the LORDE chosen. Then Isai broughte Samma. But he sayde: This also hath not the LORDE chosen. Then broughte Isai his seuen sonnes before Samuel. Neuertheles Samuel saide vnto Isai: The LORDE hath chosen none of these.

Δ And Samuel sayde vnto Isai: Are here all the childrē? He sayde: There is yet one ŷ leest of all, and beholde, he kepeth the shepe. Thē sayde Samuel vnto Isai: Sende g cause him to be fetched, for we will not syt downe at the table, vntyll he come. Then sent he, g caused him be broughte. And he was well coloured with fayre eyes g of a beutyfull countenaunce. And the LORDE saide: Aryse, and anoynte him, that is he.

Thē toke Samuel his oyle horne, g anoynted him amonge his brethrē. And the sprete of the LORDE came vpō Dauid frō ý daye forth. As for Samuel, he gat him vp, g wente vnto Ramath. But the sprete of the LORDE departed from Saul, and an euell sprete from  $\frac{1}{7}$  LORDE vexed him. Then sayde Sauls seruauntes vnto him: Beholde, an euell sprete from God vexeth the. Let oure lorde saie vnto his seruauntes which stonde before him,  $\frac{1}{7}$  they seke a man which can playe vpon the harpe, and instrumente, that whan the euell sprete of God cometh vpon the, he maye playe with his hande, to ease the withall. Then sayde Saul vnto his seruaūtes: Prouyde me a mā, that can playe well vpon the instrumente,  $\frac{1}{3}$ brynge him vnto me.

Then answered one of the children, α sayde: 🗃 Beholde, I sawe a sonne of Isai y Bethleemite, which can playe vpon the instrumete, an honest a valeaut man, and one y hath vnderstödinge in matters, a is welfauoured. The Saul sent messaungers vnto Isai, savēge: Sende me Dauid thy sonne, which is with the shepe. Then toke Isai an asse with bred,  $\pi$  a bottell with wyne, and a kyd, and sent it vnto Saul by Dauid his sonne. So Dauid came to Saul, a stode before him, a he loued him well, and he became his wapen bearer. And Saul sente vnto Isai, sayege: Let Dauid remayne before me, for he hath founde fauoure in my sighte. Now whan the sprete of God came vpo Saul, Dauid toke y harpe, a played with his hande: so was Saul refreszshed, g eased, a the euell sprete departed from him.

THE Philistynes gathered their hoost to  $\hat{y}$  battayl, and came together to Socho in Iuda, q pitched their tentes betwene Socho q Aseka, at the ende of Damin. But Saul qthe mē of Israel came together, q pitched in the Oke valley, q prepared them selues to the battayll agaynst the Philistynes. And the Philistynes stode vpon a hyll on the one syde, and the Israelites vpon a hyll on the other syde, so that there was a valley betwene them.

lome, and the yron of his speare had sixe hundreth Sicles of yron, and his wapen bearer wente before him.

And he stode and called vnto the hoost of 扔 Israel, and sayde vnto them: Wherfore are ve come forth to prepare youre selues to the battavil? Am not I a Philistyne, and ye the seruauntes of Saul? Chose one amonge you to come downe vnto me: yf he can fighte agaynst me and slaye me, then wil we be youre seruauntes: but yf I can ouercome him and slaye him, then shal ye be oure seruauntes, to do vs seruyce. And the Philistyne sayde : I have spoke diszdanedly vnto the hoost of Israel this daye. Geue me one, and let vs fighte together. Whan Saul and all Israel herde these wordes of v Philistyne, they were astonnyed, and sore afrayed.

But Dauid was the sonne of a man of Ephrata of Bethleem Iuda, whose name was Isai, which had eight sonnes, and was an olde man in Sauls tyme, and was well strycken in age amonge men. And the thre eldest sonnes of Isai were gone with Saul to the battayll. And there names were these: Eliab the first borne, Abinadab the seconde, and Samma the thirdc. But Dauid was the yongest of all. So whan the thre eldest were gone with Saul to the battayll, Dauid wente agayne from Saul, to kepe his fathers shepe at Bethleem. But the Philistyne stepte forth early in the mornynge and at euen, and stode there fortye dayes.

Isai sayde vnto Dauid his sonne : Take this Epha of firmentye for thy brethren, and these ten loaues of bred (and runne to the hoost vnto thy brethren) g these ten new cheses, and brynge them to y captayne, and loke how thy brethren do, whether it go well with them or no, and take what they byd the. But Saul and they, and all the men of Israel were in the Oke valley, and foughte agaynst the Philistynes.

Then Dauid gat him vp early in the mornynge, and commytted the shepe to y keper, and toke his burthen, wente his waye, as Isai commaunded him, and came to the tet. And the hoost was gone forth, and had prepared them selues, and cried in the battayl: For Israel had set them selues in araye, and the Philistynes were agaynst their hoost in their araye also.

Then lefte Dauid the vessell that he bare, with the keper of the stuffe, and ranne to the hoost, and wente in, and saluted his brethren. And whyle he was yet talkynge with them, beholde, then came vp the stoute bolde man, whose name was Goliath, the Philistine of Gath, out of the Philistynes hoost, and spake like as afore, and Dauid herde it. But every man of Israel, whan he sawe the man, fled from him, and was sore afrayed of him.

And euery man in Israel sayde: Haue ye sene the man commynge vp hither? For he is come vp hither, to speake diszdanedly vnto Israel. And who so euer smyteth him, him wyll the kynge make ryche, and geue him his doughter, and make his fathers house fre in Israel.

Then sayde Dauid vnto the men that stode a by him: What shalbe done to the man, that smyteth this Philistyne, and turneth this shame awaye from Israel? For what is he this Philistyne this vncircūcysed, that defyeth the hoost of y lyuynge God? Then the people tolde him as afore: Thus shall it be done vnto y man that smyteth him. And Eliab his greater brother herde him talke with the men, and was very wroth agaynst Dauid, and sayde: Wherfore art thou come downe? and why hast thou left a fewe shepe in the wyldernesse? I knowe thy presumptuousnesse well ynough, and the wickednesse of thine hert: for thou art come downe to se the battayll. Dauid answered: What haue I downe now? Is there not an occasion? And he turned him selfe from him vnto another, and spake acordinge as he had sayde before. Then the people answered him like as afore.

And whan they herde the wordes which Dauid sayde, they tolde them in the presence of Saul, and he caused him be fetched. And Dauid sayde vnto Saul: Let no mans hert be discoraged because of him. Thy seruaunt shall go, and fighte with the Philistyne. Neuertheles Saul sayde vnto Dauid: Thou art not able to go agaynst this Phylistyne to fighte with him, for thou art but a childe : but this is a man of warre from his youth vp.

Dauid saycle vnto Saul: Thy seruaunt kepte E his fathers shepe, and there came a lyon and a Bere, and caried awaye a shepe from the flocke, then wente I forth after him, and smote him, and delyuered it out of his mouth. * And whan he wolde haue bene vpon me, I toke

Therfore shall this Philistyne this vncircumcysed be euen as one of them: for he hath defyed the hoost of the lyuynge God. And Dauid sayde: The LORDE that delyuered me from  $\hat{y}$  Lyon and Beer, shall delyuer me also from this Philistyne.

And Saul sayde vnto Dauid: Go thy wave, the LORDE be with the. And Saul clothed Dauid with his clothes, and set an helmet of stele vpon his heade, and put an habergion vpo him. And Dauid girded his swerde aboue his clothes, and beganne to go, for he had neuer bene vsed to it afore. Then sayde Dauid vnto Saul: I can not go thus, for I haue not bene vsed to it, and so he laied it from him, and toke his staff in his hande, and chose fyue slighte stones out of the ryuer, and put them in the shepardes bagge which he had by him, and toke a slynge in his hande, and made him to the Philistyne. And the Philistyne wente forth, and made him to Dauid, and his wapen bearer before him.

Now whan the Philistyne loked g sawe Dauid, he thoughte scorne of him: for he was but a childe, well coloured, and beutyfull to loke vpon. And the Philistyne sayde vnto Dauid: Am I a dogg then, that thou commest vnto me with a staffe? And he cursed Dauid by his God, and sayde vnto Dauid: Come hither to me, I wil geue thy flesh to the foules vnder the heauen, and to the beastes in the Neuertheles Dauid sayde vnto the felde. Philistyne: Thou commest vnto me with swerde, speare and shylde. But I come vnto the in the name of the LORDE Zebaoth the God of the hoost of Israel, whom thou hast despysed. This daye shall the LORDE delyuer the in to my hade, that I may smyte the, and take thy heade from the, and geue the bodies of the hoost of the Philistynes this daye vnto the foules vnder the heauen, and to the wylde beestes vpon the earth, that all the londe maye knowe y Israel hath a God. And all this congregacion shal knowe, that the LORDE saueth nether thorow swerde ner speare: for the battayll is the LORDES, g he shal delyuer you in to oure handes.

Now whan the Philistyne gat him vp, and wente forth and drue nye vnto Dauid, Dauid made haiste, and ranne from  $\frac{1}{2}$  hoost vnto the Philistyne: And Dauid put his hāde in his bagg, and toke out a stone,  $\mathfrak{q}$  thrue it with the slynge, \*and hytt the Philistyne euen in the fore heade, so that the stone stacke in his fore heade, and he fell downe to the grounde vpon his face.

So Dauid ouercame y Philistyne with the 3 slynge and with  $\psi$  stone, and smote him, and slewe him. And for so moch as Dauid had no swerde in his hande, he ranne and stode ouer & Philistyne, †and toke his swerde, and drue it out of the sheeth, and slewe him, and smote of his heade withall. Whan the Philistynes sawe that the strongest of them was deed, they fled. And the men of Israel and Iuda gat the vp, and cryed and folowed vpon the Philistynes, tyll they came vnto the valley, and to the Portes of Ekron. And the Philistynes fell downe slayne vnto Gath and to Ekron. And the children of Israel turned agayne from chasynge of the Philistynes, and spoyled their tentes. But Dauid toke the heade of the Philistyne, and broughte it vnto Ierusalem, as for his armoure, he layed it in his tente.

Whan Saul sawe Dauid go forth agaynst the Philistyne, he saide vnto § Abner his chefe captayne: Abner, whose sonne is this childe? Abner sayde: As truly as thy soule lyueth O kynge, I wote not. The kynge sayde: Axe the whose sonne the yonge ma is. Now whan Dauid came agayne from the slaughter of the Philistyne, Abner toke him, and broughte him before Saul, and he had the Philistynes heade in his hande. And Saul sayde vnto him: Whose sonne art thou, thou yonge man? Dauid sayde: I am a sonne of thy seruaunt Isai the Bethleemite.

It fortuned, that whan Dauid was come 33 agayne from the slaughter of the Philistyne, the wemen wente out of all the cities of Israel with songes of daunses, to mete kynge Saul, with tymbrels, with myrth, and with fyddels. And the wemen sange one to another, and played g sayde : * Saul hath smytten his thousande : but Dauid his ten thousande.

Then was Saul very wroth, and y worde displeased him sore, and he sayde: They have ascrybed ten thousande vnto Dauid, and but one thousande vnto me: what shal he haue more but the kyngdome? And from that dave forth, Saul loked sowerly vpo Dauid.

C The nexte daye after came the euell sprete of God vpon Saul, and prophecyed in y myddes of the house. But Dauid played on the instrumente with his hande, as he was wonte daylie. And Saul had a iauelynge in his hande, and cast it, and thoughte: I wyll stycke Dauid fast to the wall. Neuerthelesse Dauid turned himselfe twyse awaye from him. And Saul was afrayed of Dauid: for the LORDE was with him, and was departed from Saul. Then Saul put him from him, and set him to be prynce ouer a thousande men, and he went out and in before the people. And Dauid behaued himselfe wysely in all his doynges, and the LORDE was with him.

D Now whan Saul sawe that he was so exceadynge wyse, he stode in feare of him. But all Israel and Iuda loued Dauid, for he wente out and in before them. And Saul sayde vnto Dauid: Beholde, my greatest doughter Merob t wyl I geue the to wyfe: be stronge now, a gouerne the warres of the LORDE For Saul thought: my hade shal not be vpon him, but the hande of y Philistynes. And Saul spake vnto his seruaūtes: Talke with Dauid secretly g saye : Beholde, the kinge hath pleasure in the, and all his seruauntes loue the, mary thou therfore the kynges doughter.

And Sauls seruauntes spake these wordes JF in the eares of Dauid. But Dauid saide : Thynke ye it but a small matter, to mary the kynges doughter? As for me, I am but a poore symple man. And Sauls seruauntes tolde him agayne, and sayde: Soch wordes hath Dauid spoken. Saul sayde : Then saye ye vnto Dauid: The kynge desyreth no dowry, but onely an hundreth foreszkynnes of the Philistynes, that vengeaunce maye be taken of the kinges enemies. Howbeit Saul thought to cause Dauid be slayne by the hades of the Philistynes. Then his seruluntes tolde Dauid these wordes, and Dauid was contente with the matter, to mary the kynges doughter.

And after a fewe dayes Dauid gatt him Ø vp, and wente with his men, and smote two hundreth men amonge the Philistynes. And Dauid broughte their foreszkynnes, and made their nombre sufficient vnto the kynge, y he mighte mary the kynges doughter. The Saul gaue him his doughter Michol to wyfe. And Saul sawe and perceaued, that the LORDE was with Dauid. And Michol Sauls doughter loued him. Then was Saul the more afrayed, and became his enemye as loge as he lyued. And whan the prynces of the Philistynes wete forth, Dauid behaued him selfe more wysely then all the seruauntes of Saul in their outgoynge: so that his name was in greate reputacion.

And Ionathas reported § best of Dauid vnto Saul his father, and sayde vnto him: Oh let not the kynge synne agaynst his seruaunt, for he hath not synned agaynst the, and his doynge is very necessary for the, * he put his lyfe in his hande also, and smote the Philistyne, g the LORDE dyd a greate health vnto all Israel: this hast thou sene, and reioysed therof. Wherfore wylt thou then offende agaynst innocent bloude, that thou woldest kyll Dauid without a cause? Then herkened Saul vnto the voice of Ionathas and sware: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, he shal not dye. Then Ionathas called Dauid, and tolde him all these wordes, and brought him to Saul, so that he was in presence like as afore tyme.

But there arose a battayll agayne, and Dauid wente forth, and fought agaynet, and Dauid wente forth, and fought agaynst the Philistynes, and smote a greate slaughter, so that they fled before him. Neuertheles  $\hat{\mathbf{v}}$ euell sprete of the LORDE came vpon Saul, and he sat in his house, and had a iauelynge in his hande. But Dauid plaied vpon the instrument with his hāde. And Saul thought with the iauelinge to sticke Dauid fast to the wall. Howbeit, he wente asyde frō Saul and the iauelynge smote in the wall. And Dauid fled, and escaped that night.

Notwithstondinge Saul sent his messaungers to Dauids house, that they shulde lave wayte for him, and kyll him in the mornynge. Michol Dauids wyfe tolde him this, and sayde: Yf thou saue not thy soule this night, thou shalt dye tomorow. + Then Michol let him downe thorow the wyndow, so that he wente his waye, fled, and escaped. And Michol toke an ymage, and layed it in the bed, and laied a goates szkinne at the heade of it, and couered it with clothes. Then Saul sent messaugers, to fetch Dauid. But she sayde : He is sicke. Neuerthelesse Saul sent messaungers to se Dauid, a sayde: Bringe him vp to me with the bed, that he maye be slayne.

Now whan the messaungers came, beholde, the ymage laye in the bed, and a goates szkynne at the heade of it. Then sayde Saul vnto Michol: Why hast thou begyled me, and let myne enemye go, that he mighte escape? Michol sayde vnto Saul: He sayde vnto me: Let me go, or I wyl kyll the. As for Dauid, he fled, and escaped, and came to Samuel vnto Ramath, and tolde him all  $\frac{1}{2}$  Saul had done vnto him. And he wente with Samuel, and they abode at Naioth.

And it was tolde Saul: Beholde, Dauid is  $\mathbf{B}$ at Naioth in Ramath. Then Saul sente messaungers to fetch Dauid. And they sawe a company of prophetes prophecienge, and Samuel had the ouersight of them. Then came the sprete of God vpon the messaungers of Saul, so that they prophecyed also.

Whan this was tolde Saul, he sent other messaungers, which prophecied likewyse. Then sente he messaungers the thyrde tyme, and they in like maner prophecyed. Then wente he himselfe also vnto Ramath, and whan he came to the greate well which is at Secho, he axed and sayde: Where is Samuel and Dauid? Then was it tolde him: beholde, at Naioth in Ramath. And he wente thither, euen vnto Naioth in Ramath. And § sprete of God came vpon him also, and he wete a prophecied till he came vnto Naioth in Ramath. And he put of his clothes, a prophecied likewise before Samuel, a fell downe naked all that daye and all that nighte. ‡ Here of came the prouerbe: Is Saul also amonge the prophetes?

Dauid hid himself in the felde. And wha the new Mone came, the kynge sat him downe at the table to eate. Whan the kynge had set him downe in his place as he was wonte by the wall, Ionathas stode vp, but Abner sat him downe besyde Saul. And Dauid was myssed in his place. And Saul spake nothinge that daye, for he thoughte : There is somwhat happend vnto him, that he is not cleane. On the seconde daye of the new Mone, whan Dauid was myssed in his place, Saul saide vnto Ionathas his sonne: Wherfore is not the sonne of Isai come to the table nether yesterdaye ner to daye?

Ionathas answered Saul: He prayed me a that he mighte go vnto Bethleem, and sayde: Let me go, for oure kynred hath a sacrifyce to do in the cyte, and my brother hath sent for me himselfe: yf I haue founde fauoure now in thy syghte, I wyll go, and se my brethren : therfore is he not come to the kynges table. Then was the kynge wroth at Ionathas, and sayde vnto him : Thou wicked and vnthrifte, I knowe how that thou hast chosen the sonne of Isai, to the shame of thy selfe and of thy shamefull mother. For as longe as y sonne of Isai lyueth vpo earth nether thou ner thy kingdome shal prospere. Sende now therfore, and cause him to be fetched vnto me, ‡for he is a childe of death.

Yf thou wylt haue it, take it, for here is els none but it. Dauid sayde: There is not soch another, geue me it.

And Dauid gat him vp, and fled from Saul, 2 and came to Achis y kynge of Gath. But Achis seruauntes sayde vnto him: This is Dauid the kynge of the londe, of whom they sunge in the daunse, and sayde: ¶ Saul hath smytten his thousande, but Dauid his ten thousande. And Dauid toke these wordes to hert, and was sore afrayed of Achis the kynge of Gath, and altered his countenaunce before them, and shewed himselfe as he had bene madd in their handes, and stackered towarde the dores of the gate, and his slauerynges ranne downe his beerd. Then sayde Achis vnto his seruauntes: Beholde, ye se that the man is out of his wyt, why have ye brought him vnto me? Haue I to fewe madd men, that ye haue brought this hither to be madd before me? ND it was tolde Dauid: Beholde, the A Philistynes fight against Cegila, and spoyle the barnes. Then Dauid axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shal I go, a smyte these Philistynes? And the LORDE sayde vnto Dauid : Go thy waye, thou shalt smyte the Philistynes, and delyuer Cegila. But v men that were with Dauid, sayde vnto him: Beholde, we are here in feare in Iewry, and shall we go to Cegila vnto the hoost of the Philistynes? The Dauid axed at the LORDE agayne. And the LORDE answered him, and sayde : Vp, get the downe to Cegila, for I wil delyuer the Philistynes in to thy hande.

So Dauid wente with his men vnto Cegila, 38 and foughte agaynst the Philistynes, a droue awaye their catell, and smote them with a greate slaughter. Thus Dauid delyuered them of Cegila. For whan Abiathar the sonne of Ahimelech fled vnto Dauid at Cegila, he bare downe the ouerbody cote with him.

him, they tolde him all these wordes. The sayde Dauid vnto his men: Euery man gyrde his swerde aboute him. And euery one gyrde his swerde aboute him. And Dauid gyrde his swerde aboute him also, and there wete vp after him vpon a foure hundreth men, but two hundreth remayned with the stuffe.

Neuertheles one of the yonge men tolde Abi-C gail Nabals wife, and sayde : Beholde, Dauid sent messaungers out of the wyldernes to blesse oure lorde, Notwithstondinge he was fearce vpo them, and yet haue they bene very profitable men vnto vs, and haue done vs no dishonoure, and we wanted none of the nombre as loge as we walked with them, whan we were in the felde: but they have bene oure wall daye and nighte, as longe as we kepte the shepe by them. Take hede now therfore, and loke well what thou doest, for there is surely a mysfortune at hande agaynst oure lorde, g agaynst all his house. And he is a man of Belial, to whom no man darre saye eny thinge. Then Abigail made haist, and toke two hundred loaues of bred, and two botels of wyne, and fyue shepe ready dighte, and fyue measures of firmentye, and an hundreth frayles of rasens, and two hundreth frayles of fygges, a layed them vpo asses, and sayde to hir yonge men: Go ye youre waye before me, beholde, I wyl come after. And she tolde Nabal hir housbade nothinge therof. And as she rode vpō the asse, and wente downe in the shadowe of v hill, beholde, Dauid a his mē met hir downe, so that she came vpon them.

玬 But Dauid sayde: Wel, all that this man had in y wyldernes, haue I kepte for naughte, so that there wanted nothinge of all that he had, and he rewardeth me euell for good. God do this and yet more vnto the enemies of Dauid, yf vntyll tomorow in the mornynge I leave this man (of all that he hath) so moch as one that maketh water agaynst y wall. Now whan Abigail sawe Dauid, she lighte downe from the asse in all the haist, and fell vpo hir face before Dauid, and worshiped him to the grounde, and fell at his fete, and sayde: Oh my lorde, let this trespace be myne, and let thy handmayde speake before thine eares, and heare the wordes of thy handmayden: Let not my lorde set his hert agaynst this Nabal the man of Belial, for he is a foole, acordinge as his name is called: his name is foole, and foolishnes is with him. As for me thy handmayde, I sawe not my lordes yonge men, whom thou dyddest sende.

But now my lorde, as truly as the LORDE lyueth, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, the LORDE hath kepte the backe, y thou shuldest not come agaynst bloude, and he hath delyuered thine hande.

Thine enemyes be now as Nabal, and so be E they that wolde my lorde euell. Here is § blessynge, y thy handmayde hath brought my lorde, take it, and geue it vnto the yonge men, that walke vnder my lorde. For a sure house shal & LORDE make my lorde, which fighteth the fighte of the LORDE, and no euell shall be founde in the all thy life longe. And yf eny man ryse vp to persecute y, and to laye wayte for thy soule, then shal the soule of my lorde be bounde in the bundell of y lyuynge, euen with the LORDE thy God. But 🖑 soule of thine enemies shalbe turned backe with the slynge. AUID thoughte in his hert: One of J these dayes shal I fall in to the handes of Saul: It is better that I get me my waye in to y londe of y Philistynes, that Saul maye leaue of from sekynge me in all the coastes of Israel, so shall I escape his handes. And he gat him vp, and wente ouer (with the sixe hundreth men that were with him) vnto Achis the sonne of Maoch kynge of Gath. So Dauid remayned by Achis at Gath, with his me, euery one with his housholde, and Dauid with his two wyues, Ahinoam the Iesraelitisse, and Abigail Nabals wife of Carmel. And whan worde came to Saul that Dauid was fled vnto Gath, he soughte him nomore.

And Dauid sayde vnto Achis: Yf I haue founde grace in thy sighte, then let there be geuen me a place in one of the cities of the londe, that I maye dwell therin. He sayde: Brynge me vp Samuel.

Now whan  $\hat{y}$  woman sawe Samuel, she cryed loude, and sayde vnto Saul: Wherfore hast thou begyled me? Thou art Saul. And the kynge sayde vnto her: Feare not, what seist thou? The woman sayde vnto Saul: I se goldes comynge vp out of  $\hat{y}$  earth? He sayde: How is he shapened? She sayde: There commeth vp an olde man, and is clothed with a longe garment. Then fell Saul immediatly vnto the earth, for he coulde not stonde, and was sore afrayed at these wordes of Samuel, so that there was nomore strength in him: for he had eaten no bred all that daye and all that night.

And the woman wente in to Saul,  $\mathfrak{q}$  sawe  $\mathfrak{X}$  that he was sore vexed, and sayde vnto him : Beholde, thy handmayde hath herkened vnto thy voyce, and I haue put my soule in my hande, so that I haue herkened vnto thy wordes which thou spakest vnto me. # The rrr. Chapter.

YOW whan Dauid came to Siclag on the thirde daie with his men, the Amalechites had falle in on y south parte and at Siclag, and had smytten Siclag, and burned it with fyre, and had caried awaye the weme out of it, both small g greate. Neuertheles they had slayne no man, but dryuen the thence, and were goynge on their waye. Now whan Dauid with his men came to the cite, and sawe that it was brent with fyre, and that their wyues, sonnes a doughters were led awaye captyue, Dauid and the people that was with him lefte vp their voyce, and wepte so longe tyll they coulde wepe nomore. For Dauids two wyues also were caried awaye captyue, Ahinoam y Iesraelitisse, and Abigail Nabals wife of Carmel. And Dauid was very soroufull, for the people wolde haue stoned him : for y soule of all the people was in greate heuynes, euery one ouer his sonnes and doughters.

B Neuertheles Dauid strengthed him selfe in the LORDE his God, g sayde vnto Abiathar  $\hat{\mathbf{y}}$  prest the sonne of Ahimelech: \*Bringe me hither the ouerbody cote. And whan Abiathar had broughte the ouerbody cote vnto Dauid, Dauid axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shal I folowe vpon the men of warre, and shal I ouertake them? He sayde: Yee, folowe vpo them, thou shalt ouertake them, and shalt rescue the pray. Then wente Dauid his waye, and the sixe hūdreth men that were with him. And whan they came to the ryuer of Besor, some stode styll. But Dauid and the foure hundreth men that stode styll, they had bene slowe to go ouer the ryuer of Besor.

And they founde a man of Egipte vpon the felde, him they broughte vnto Dauid,  $\dagger_{\text{G}}$  gaue him bred to eate, and water to drynke, and gaue him a quantite of fygges,  $\mathfrak{g}$  two quantities of rasyns. And whan he had eaten, his sprete came to him againe: for in thre dayes and thre nightes he had eate no bred, and dronke no water.

Dauid sayde vnto him: Whose art thou?  $\mathfrak{g}$ whence art thou? FTER # death of Saul whan Dauid was come agayne from the "slaughter of F Amalechites, and had remayned two dayes at Siclag, beholde, on the thirde daye there came a man out of Sauls hoost, with his clothes rente, and earth vpon his heade. And whan he came vnto Dauid, he fell downe to the grounde, and worshipped. Dauid sayde vnto him: Whence commest thou? He sayde vnto him: Out of the hoost of Israel am I fled. Dauid sayde vnto him: Tell me, what is the matter? He sayde: the people is fled from the battayll, and many of the people are fallen: Yee and Saul also is deed and his sonne Ionathas. Dauid sayde vnto the yonge ma that brought him this worde: How knowest thou that Saul and Ionathas his sonne are deed? The yonge man y tolde him this, sayde: I came by chaunce vnto mount Gelboa, and beholde, Saul leaned vpon his speare, t the charettes and horsme folowed harde after him: and he turned him aboute, and sawe me, and called me. And I savde: Here, am I. And he sayde vnto me: What art thou? I sayde vnto him: I am an Amalechite. And he saide vnto me: Come to me, and kyll me, for anguysh hath gotten holde of me : for my life is yet whole within me.

And Dauid sayde to the yonge man that C broughte him worde: What art thou? He sayde: I am y sonne of a straunger an Amalechite. Dauid sayde : How happeneth it that thou wast not afrayed to laye thine hade vpon the LORDES anointed to destroye him? And Dauid sayde vnto one of his yonge men: Come hither, and slaye him. And he smote him that he dyed. Then sayde Dauid vnto him: 'Thy bloude be vpon thyne owne heade. + For thy mouth hath spoken against thyselfe and sayde: I haue slayne the anoynted of the LORDE. And Dauid mourned this lamentacion ouer Saul and Ionathas his sonne, and commaunded to teach the childre of Iuda the bowe. - Beholde, it is wrytten in the boke of the righteous.

The if. Chapter.

A FTER these actes Dauid ‡ axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shall I go vp in to one of the cities of Iuda? And the LORDE sayde vnto him: Go vp. Dauid sayde: Whither? He sayde: Vnto Hebron. So Dauid wente thither with his two wyues, Ahinoam the Iesraelitisse, and Abigail Nabals wyfe of Carmel. And Dauid broughte vp the men that were with him also, euery one with his housholde, and they dwelt in the cities of Hebron. And § men of Iuda came, and there they anointed him kynge ouer the house of Iuda.

And whā it was tolde Dauid, § that they of Iabes in Gilead had buried Saul, he sent messaungers vnto them, sayenge: Blessed be ye of the LORDE, that ye haue done soch mercy vpon youre lorde Saul, and haue buried him. The LORDE therfore shewe mercy now and faithfulnes vpon you. And because ye haue done this, I also wyll do you good. Let youre hāde now therfore be comforted, and be ye stronge: for though Saul youre lorde be deed, yet hath the house of Iuda chosen me to be kynge ouer them. But Abner the sonne of Ner, which was Sauls chefe captayne, toke Iszboseth the sonne of Saul, and broughte him thorow the hoost, and made him kynge ouer Gilead, Assuri, Iesrael, Ephraim, Ben Iamin and ouer all Israel. And Iszboseth the sonne of Saul was fourtye yeare olde, whan he was made kynge of Israel, a he raigned two yeares. But the house of Iuda helde with Dauid: IThe tyme y Dauid was kynge at Hebron ouer the house of Iuda, was seuen yeare and sixe monethes longe.

And Abner the sonne of Ner wete forth with the seruauntes of Iszboseth the sonne of Saul, out of § hoost vnto Gibeon. And Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia wete forth with Dauids seruauntes, and they met together by the pole at Gibeon, and these laye on the one syde of the pole, the other on the other syde. And Abner sayde vnto Ioab: Let the yonge me get them vp, and playe before vs. Ioab sayde: Let them aryse. Then gat they them vp,  $\pi$ wente in nombre twolue of Ben Iamin on Iszboseth Sauls sonnes syde, and twolue of Dauids seruauntes. And euery one gat another by the heade, and thrust his swerde in his syde, and fell together: therfore is the place called Helkath hazurim (that is, the felde of the Worthies) which is at Gibeon.

And there arose a sore harde battayll the C same daye. But Abner and the men of Israel were put to flighte of Dauids seruauntes. Thre sonnes of Zeru Ia were there, Ioab, Abisai & Asahel. As for Asahel, he was lighte of fete as a Roo in y felde, a folowed after Abner, and turned not asyde nether to the righte hande ner to y lefte from Abner. Then Abner turned him aboute, and sayde: Art thou Asahel? He sayde: Yee. Abner sayde vnto him: Go thy waye ether to the righte hande or to the lefte, and get the one of y yonge men, and take his harnesse from Neuertheles he wolde not leaue of fro him. Then sayde Abner agayne to Asahel: him. Get the awaye fro me, why wilt thou that I smyte the to the grounde? and how darre I lifte vp my face before thy brother Ioab? Howbeit he wolde not go his waye.

Then Abner thrust him in with a speare in to his bely, so that the speare wete out behynde him. And there he fell and dyed before him: and who so came to the place where Asahel laye deed, stode styll there. But Ioab and Abisai folowed vpon Abner, till the sonne wente downe. And whan they came to $ hyll of Amma, which lieth before Giah, by $ waye to the wildernes of Gibeon, the children of Ben Iamin gathered them selues together behynde Abner, and grewe to a multitude, and stode vpon the toppe of an hyll.

And Abner called vnto Ioab, and sayde:
 Shal the swerde thē deuoure without ende?
 Knowest thou not, that it wyll be bytter at the last? How longe wil it be or thou saie vnto the people, that they leaue of from their brethrē? Ioab sayde: As truly as God lyueth yf thou haddest sayde thus daye in the morninge, the people had ceassed euery one from his brother. And Ioab blewe the trompet, g all the people stode still, and folowed nomore vpon Israel, nether foughte they eny more.

Abner and his men wente all that same night ouer the playne felde, and passed ouer lordane,  $\mathfrak{g}$  walked thorow all Bithron, and came to the tentes. Ioab turned him from Abner, and gathered all  $\hat{y}$  people together. And of Dauids seruauntes there myssed nynetene men, and Asahel. But Dauids seruautes had smytten so amonge Ben Iamin and the men of Abner, that thre hundreth and thre score men were deed. And they toke vp Asahel, and buried him in his fathers graue at Bethleem. And Ioab with his men wēte all that nighte: and at the breake of the daie they came vnto Hebron.

The iff. Chapter.

ND there was a longe battayll betwene the house of Saul and the house of Dauid. But Dauid wente and increased, and the house of Saul wente and mynished. And vnto Dauid were children borne at Hebron. His firstborne sonne Ammon of Ahinoam the lesrnelitisse: the seconde Chileab of Abigail the wyfe of Nabal of Carmel: the thirde Ubalon the sonne of Maacha the doughter of Hadmai kynge of Gessur: the fourth Adonia the sonne of Hagith: the fyfth Saphatia the conne of Abital:  $\hat{y}$  sixte lethream of Egla Dauids wife. These were borne vnto Dauid at Hebron. Now whan it was warre betwene the house of Saul τ the house of Dauid, Abner strengthed Sauls house. And Saul had had a concubyne, whose name was Rispa the doughter of Aia. And Iszboseth sayde vnto Abner: Wherfore liest thou with my fathers concubyne?

Then was Abner very wroth at these wordes of Iszboseth, and sayde: Am I a dogges heade then, that I agaynst Iuda do mercy vnto the house of Saul thy father, and vnto his brethren and kynsfolkes? and haue not delyuered the in to  $\S$  hande of Dauid, and thou layest a trespace to my charge this daye for a womans sake? God do Abner this and that, yf I do not \*as the LORDE hath sworne vnto Dauid, that the kyngdome maye be taken frō the house of Saul, and \$ seate of Dauid set vp ouer Israel and Iuda, from Dan vnto Berseba. Then coulde he not answere him one worde agayne, he feared him so.

And Abner sent messaungers vnto Dauid, sayenge: Whose is the londe? And sayde: Make thy couenaunt with me. Beholde, my hande shall be with the, to turne all Israel vnto the.

He sayde: Wel, I wyll make a couenaunt  $\mathbb{C}$ with the, but one thynge I desyre of the, that thou se not my face, excepte thou brynge me first Michol Sauls doughter, whan thou commest to se my face. Dauid sent messaungers also vnto Iszboseth the sonne of Saul, sayenge: 'Geue me my wyfe Michol, whom I maried with an hundreth foreszkinnes of the Philistynes. Iszboseth sent, and caused for to take her from the man + Palthiel the sonne of Lais. And hir huszbande wente with her, and wepte behynde her vnto Bahurim. Then sayde Abner vnto him: Turne backe agayne; and go thy waye. And he turned backe agayne.

And Abner talked with the Elders in Israel, and sayde: Youre myndes haue bene set afore tyme and longe a goo vpon Dauid, that he mighte be kynge ouer you, do it now therfore, for $ LORDE hath sayde of Dauid: I wil delyuer my people of Israel by the hade of Dauid my seruaunt, from the hande of the Philistynes, and from the hande of all their enemics.

Abner spake also before the eares of Ben Iamin, and wente to speake before the eares of Dauid at Hebron all that Israel and the whole house of Ben Iamin was contente withall. Now whan Abner came to Hebron vnto Dauid, and twcty men with him, Dauid made them a feast. And Abner sayde vnto Dauid: I wyll get me vp, and go gather all Israel together to my lorde the kynge, and that they maye make a couenaunt with the, that thou mayest be kynge, at thy soules desyre.

So Dauid let Abner go from him in peace. And beholde, Dauid seruaūtes and Ioab came from the men of warre, and broughte a greate spoyle with them. And Abner was not now with Dauid at Hebron, for he had sent him from him, so that he was gone his waye in peace.

But whan Ioab and all the hoost with him Æ was come, it was tolde him that Abner the sonne of Ner came to the kynge, and how he had sent him fro him, so that he was gone his waye in peace. Then wente loab in to the kynge, and sayde: What hast thou done? Beholde, Abner came to the, why hast thou sent him from the, that he is gone his waye? Knowest thou not Abner the sonne of Ner? For he came to the to disceaue the, that he mighte knowe thy outgoynge, and ingoynge, and to spie out all that thou doest. And whan Ioab wente out from Dauid, he sent messaügers after Abner, to fetch him agayne from Boharsira, and Dauid knewe not therof. Now whan Abner came agayne vnto Hebron, Ioab brought him in to y middes vnder y gate, to talke with him secretly, and thrust him there in to § bely that he dyed, because of his brother Asahels bloude.

J Whan Dauid knewe of it therafter, he sayde: I am vngiltye, and so is my kyngdome for euer before the LORDE concernynge the bloude of Abner  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ner: but vpon the heade of Ioab fall it, and vpon all his fathers house, and in the house of Ioab there cease not one to haue a renninge yssue and a leprosy, and to go vpon a staffe, and fall thorow the swerde, and to haue scarnesse of bred. Thus Ioab and his brother Abisai slewe Abner, \* because he had slayne their brother Asahel in the battaill at Gibeon.

Dauid sayde vnto Ioab and to all § people § was with him: Rente youre clothes, and gyrde sack cloth aboute you, and make lamentacion for Abner. And the kynge wente after the Bere. And whan they buryed Abner at Hebron, the kynge lifte vp his voyce, and wepte besyde Abners graue, and all the people wepte also.

Ø And the kynge mourned for Abner, and sayde: Abner is not deed as a foole dyeth. Thy handes were not bounde, thy fete were not vexed with fetters, thou art fallen as a man falleth before wicked vnthriftes. Then all the people bewayled him yet more.

Now whan all the people came in to eate with Dauid, whyle it was yet hye daye, Dauid sware, and sayde: God do this and that vnto me, yf I taist ether bred or oughte els afore the Sone go downe. And all y people knewe it, and it pleased them well all that $ kynge dyd in the sighte of all the people. And all the people and all Israel perceaued the same daye, that it came not of the kynge, that Abner the sonne of Ner was slavne. And the kynge sayde vnto his seruauntes: Knowe ye not that this daye a prynce and a greate man is fallen in Israel? As for me, I am yet but tender and anoynted kynge. But the men the children of Zeru Ia are to harde for me. The LORDE recompence him that doth euell, acordinge to his wickednes.

The iiij. Chapter.

WHAN Sauls sonne herde y Abner was a deed at Hebron, his hades were feble, g all Israell was sory. But there were two men captaynes ouer the soudyers vnder the sonne of Saul, the one was called Baena, the other Rehob, sonnes of Rimon y Berothite, of the childre of Ben Iamin: for Beroth was And the Becouted also in Ben Iamin. rothites were fled vnto Gethaim, a were straugers there vnto this daye. Ionathas also the sonne of Saul had a sonne which was lame on his fete, a was fyue yeare olde whan the rumoure of Saul and Ionathas came from And his norse toke him, and fled. lesrael. And whyle she made haist and fled, he fell, and was lame: And his name was Mephiboseth.

Then wente the sonnes of Rimon  $\hat{y}$  Berothite, Rehob  $\mathfrak{g}$  Baena,  $\mathfrak{g}$  came to the house of Iszboseth, in the heate of the daye,  $\mathfrak{g}$  he laye vp $\bar{o}$  his bed at the noone daie. And they came in to the house to fetch wheate,  $\mathfrak{g}$ thrust him in the bely,  $\mathfrak{g}$  gat them awaye. For wha they came in to  $\hat{\mathfrak{f}}$  house, he laye vp $\bar{o}$  his bed in his chamber,  $\mathfrak{g}$  they stickte him to death,  $\mathfrak{g}$  smote of his heade, and toke his heade, and departed by the waye of the playne felde all that nighte, and broughte the heade of Isboseth to Dauid vnto Hebron, and sayde vnto the kynge : Beholde, there is the heade of Iszboseth the sonne of Saul thine enemye, which layed wayte for thy soule. This daye hath the LORDE auenged my lorde the kynge of Saul and his sede.

Then answered Dauid vnto Rehob and C Baena his brother, ý sonnes of Rimon ý Berothite, a sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth, which hath deliuered my soule out of all trouble, *I toke him y brought me worde and sayde : Saul is deed, and he thoughte he had bene a good messaunger, and at Siclag I put him to death, vnto whom I shulde haue geuen a rewarde for his message. And these vngodly personnes haue slayne a righteous man in his owne house vpon his bed. Yee shulde not I requyre his bloude of youre handes, and take you awaye from y earth? And Dauid commaunded his yonge men, which slewe them, and sniote of their handes and fete, and hanged them vp by y pole at Hebron. But the heade of Iszboseth toke they, and buried it tin Abners graue at Hebron.

The b. Chapter.

- ND all the trybes of Israel came to А Dauid vnto Hebron, and sayde: #Beholde, we are thy bone and thy flesh. And afore tyme whā Saul was kynge ouer vs, thou leddest Israel out and in. So the LORDE hath sayde: Thou shalt kepe my people of Israel, and shalt be the duke ouer Israel. And all the Elders in Israel came to  $\psi$  kynge vnto Hebron. And kynge Dauid made a couenaunt with them at Hebron before \$ LORDE. And they anoynted Dauid to be kynge ouer Israel. Thyrtie yeare olde was Dauid whan he was made kynge, and reigned fortye yeares. \$At Hebron raigned he seuē yeares and sixe monethes ouer Iuda: but at lerusalem he reigned thre and thirtie yeares over all Israel and Iuda.

And Hiram the kynge of Tyre sent messaungers vnto Dauid, 'and Ceder trees for walles, and Carpenters, and Masons, to builde Dauid an house. And Dauid knewe, that the LORDE had confyrmed him kynge ouer Israel, and exalted his kingdome for his people of Israels sake. And Dauid toke yet mo wyues and concubynes at Ierusalem, after he was come from Hebron, and there were yet mo sonnes a doughters borne vnto him. I And these are the names of them that were borne vnto him at Ierusalem: Samma, Sobab, Nathan, Salomon, Iebehar, Elisua, Nepheg, Iaphia, Elisama, Eliada, Eliphalet.

And whan the Philistines herde that Dauid was anoynted kinge ouer Israel, they wete vp all to seke Dauid. Whan Dauid perceaued that, he wete downe in to a castell. But the Philistynes came and scattered them selues beneth in the valley of Rephaim. \*\* And Dauid axed at the LORDE, and sayde: Shal I go vp agaynst the Philistynes? and wylt thou delyuer them in to my hande? ND Dauid gathered agayne all the yonge chosen men in Israel, "euen thre thousande, and gat him vp, and wente with all the people that was with him of the citesins of Iuda, to fetch vp the Arke of God from thence: whose name is: The name of the LORDE Zebaoth dwelleth theron between the Cherubins. \*And they caused the arke of God to be caried vpo a new cart, †and fetched it out of  $\hat{y}$  house of Abinadab, which dwelt at Gibea. Vsa and Ahio the sonnes of Abinadab droue ŷ new cart. And whan they broughte it with the Arke from the house of Abinadab which dwelt at Gibea, Ahio wente before the Arke: and Dauid and all the house of Israel played before the LORDE, with all maner of instrumentes of Pine tre, with harpes, and Psalteries, and tabrettes, and belles, and Cymbals.

35 ‡And whan they came to the barnefloore of Nahon, Vsa stretched out his hande, § and helde the Arke of God, for the oxen wete out asyde. Then waxed the wrath of the LORDE fearce agaynst Vsa, and God smote him there because of his presumpcio, so that he dyed there besyde the Arke of God. Then was Dauid sory, because the LORDE had made soch a rente vpon Vsa, and he called the same place Perez Vsa vnto this daye. And Dauid feared the LORDE the same daie, and sayde : How shall the Arke of the LORDE come vnto me? And he wolde not let it be broughte to him in to the cite of Dauid, but caused it be brought in to y house of Obed Edom the Gathite. And whan the Arke of the LORDE had contynued thre monethes in the house of Obed Edom the Gathite, the LORDE blessed him and all his house.

And it was tolde kynge Dauid, that the LORDE had blessed the house of Obed Edō and all that he had because of the Arke of God. ∥Then wente he, and fetched vp the Arke of God out of ŷ house of Obed Edom in to the cite of Dauid with ioye. And whā they were gone sixe steppes in with the Arke of the LORDE, they offered an oxe and a fat shepe. And Dauid daunsed with all his mighte before the LORDE, and was girded with an ouerbody cote of lynnē. And Dauid with all Israel brought vp  $\frac{1}{7}$  Arke of the LORDE with tabrettes and trompettes.

And whan the Arke of the LORDE came 3 in to the cite of Dauid, Michol the doughter of Saul loked out at a window, and sawe kynge Dauid leapynge, sprynginge and dausynge before the LORDE, and despysed him in hir hert. But whan they brought in ŷ Arke of the LORDE, they set it in hir place in the myddes of the Tabernacle, which Dauid had pitched for it. And Dauid offred burnt offerynges and deed offerynges before y LORDE. And whan Dauid had made an ende of offerynge the burntofferynges and deedofferynges, he blessed the people in the name of the LORDE Zebaoth, and dealte out vnto all the people, and to the multitude of Israel, both to man g womā, vnto euery one a cake of bred, and a pece of flesh, and a meece of potage. Then wente all the people their waye, euery one vnto his house.

Whan Dauid came agayne to blesse his 🎛 house, Michol the doughter of Saul wente forth to mete him, and sayde: How glorious hath the kynge of Israel bene to daye, which hath vncouered himselfe before the maydes of his seruauntes, like as the rascall people discouer them selues. But Dauid saide vnto Michol : I wil playe before y LORDE, which hath chosen me afore thy father, and afore all his house, because he hath commaunded me to be the prynce ouer the people of the LORDE, euen ouer Israel, and yet wyl I be vyler then so, and wyll be lowe in myne owne sighte: and with the maydens wherof thou hast spoken, wyll I be honoured. As for Michol the doughter of Saul, she had no childe vnto the daye of hir death.

The bij. Chapter.

NOW whan the kynge sat in his house, and the LORDE had geuen him rest from all his enemies on euery syde, he sayde vnto the prophet Nathan : Beholde, I dwell in a house of Cedre, and the Arke of God dwelleth amonge the curtaynes. Nathan sayde vnto the kynge: Go thy waye, what so euer thou hast in thine hert,  $\frac{1}{2}$  do: for the LORDE is with the. But the same nighte came  $\frac{1}{2}$  worde of the LORDE vnto Nathan, g sayde: Go g speake to my seruaūt Dauid:

Dauid smote Hadad Eser also the sonne of Rehob kynge of Zoba, whan he wēte to fetch his power agayne at  $\hat{y}$  water Euphrates. And of them toke Dauid a thousande g seuen hundreth horsmen, and twenty thousande fote men, and lamed all the charettes, saue an hundreth which he kepte behynde. But the Siryans came from Damascon to helpe Hadad Eser kynge of Zoba. And Dauid smote two and twentye thousande men of the Syrians, and layed people vnto Damascus in Syria.

Thus was Syria subdued vnto Dauid, so that they broughte him giftes: for § LORDE helped Dauid whither so euer he wente. And Dauid toke § shyldes of golde, which Hadad Esers seruauntes had, and broughte them to Ierusalem. But from Bethah G Berothai § cities of Hadad Eser toke Dauid very moch brasse.

* Whan Thoi the kynge of Hemath herde, 弼 that Dauid had smytten all the power of Hadad Eser, he sent his sonne Ioram vnto Dauid to salute him frendly, g to blesse him, because he had foughten with Adad Eser and smytten him (for Thoi had warre with Hadad Eser) and had lewels with him of syluer, of golde, and of brasse: which kynge Dauid halowed also vnto & LORDE, with the syluer and golde which he sanctified vnto the LORDE from all the Heythe, whom he subdued, from Siria, fro Moab, from the childre of Ammon, from the Philistynes, fro Amalek, from the spoyle of Hadad Eser y sonne of Rehob kynge of Zoba.

C Dauid gat him selfe a name also whan he came, + and smote eightene thousande of $ Sirians in & Salt valley. And he layed people in all Edomea, ‡ and all Edom was subdued vnto Dauid: for the LORDE helped Dauid, whither so euer he wente. Thus was Dauid kynge ouer all Israel. And he executed iudgmente and righteousnes vnto all y people. Ioab y sonne of Zeru Ia was captayne ouer the hoost. Iosaphat the sonne of Ahilud was Chaunceler. Zadok the sonne of Achitob, a Ahimelech the sonne of Abiathar were prestes. Seraia was Scrybe. Benaia the sonne of Ioiada was ouer y Chrethians g Plethians. And the sonnes of Dauid were || prestes.

He sayde: Yee thy seruaunt. The kynge sayde: Is there yet eny man of Sauls house, y I maye do the mercy of God vpon him? Siba sayde vnto the kynge: ** There is yet a sonne of Ionathas, lame on his fete. The kynge sayde vnto him: Where is he? The sent kynge Dauid thither, g caused for to fetch him from Lodaber out of 🕈 house of Machir the sonne of Ammuel.

Now whan Mephiboseth the sonne of Ionathas the sonne of Saul came vnto Dauid, he fell vpon his face, g worshiped him. Dauid sayde: Mephiboseth. He sayde: Here am I thy seruaunt. Dauid sayde vnto him: Feare not, for I wyll do mercy vpon the for thy father Ionathas sake, and wil restore vnto the all the londe of thy father Saul: but thou shalt eate bred daylie at my table. He worshiped and sayde: Who am I thy seruaunt, that thou turnest the to a deed dogg as I am?

Then the kynge called Siba y seruaunt of Saul, and sayde vnto him: All y hath belonged vnto Saul a to all his house, haue I geuen to thy lordes sonne. - the sonne of Nahas, as his father dyd mercy vpon me. And so he sent, and comforted him by his seruaūtes ouer his fathers death. Now whan Dauids seruaūtes came in to the londe of the children of Ammon, the mightie men of the children of Ammon sayde vnto Hanun their lorde: Thynkest thou it is for the honoure of thy father in thy sighte, ý Dauid hath sent comforters vnto the? Hath he not sent his scruauntes vnto § (thynkest thou) to spye and search out the cite and to ouerthrowe it?
- B Then toke Hanun the seruauntes of Dauid, and shoue of the one halue of their beerdes, and cut of the halfe of their garmetes even by the girdell, and so let them go. Wha this was tolde Dauid, he sent to mete them: for the men were put to greate shame. And the kynge caused to saye vnto them: Abyde at lericho, tyll youre beerdes be growne, g then come agayne.

Whan the childre of Ammon sawe that they stynked in the sighte of Dauid, they sent and hyred the Sirians of the house of Rehob, and the Sirians at Zoba even twentye thousande fote men, and from the kynge of Maecha a thousande men, and from Istob twolue thousande men. Whan Dauid herde that, he sent Ioab with all the hoost of  $\mathring{y}$  men of warre. And the children of Ammon wente forth, and prepared them selves to  $\mathring{y}$  battayll before the intraunce of the gate. But the Siryans of Soba, of Rehob, of Istob and of Maecha were alone in the felde.

Now whan Ioab sawe that the battayll was set vpō him before and behynde, he chose of all the best yonge men in Israel,  $\mathfrak{q}$  prepared him selfe agaynst the Syrians. And the resydue of the people put he vnder the hande of his brother Abisai, that he mighte prepare him agaynst the childrē of Ammon. And sayde: Yf  $\mathfrak{f}$  Syrians be to mightie for me, helpe thou me: but yf the children of Ammon be to mightic for the, I shal helpe the. Take a good corage vnto the, and let vs be stronge for oure people, and for  $\mathfrak{f}$  cite of oure God: meuertheles the LORDE do what pleaseth him.

And loab made him forth with the people that was with him, to fighte agaynst the Strians: and they fled before him. And whan the children of Ammon sawe that the Syrians fled, they fled also before Abisai, a wente in to the cite. So Ioab turned agayne from the children of Ammon,  $\mathfrak{g}$  came to Ierusalem. And whan the Syrians sawe  $\dot{\mathfrak{y}}$ they were smytten before Israel, they came together.

And Hadad Eser sent 🖲 broughte out 🖗 🕮 Syrians beyonde the water, and conueyed their power in, g Sobath the chefe captayne of Hadad Eser wente before the. Whan this was tolde Dauid, he gathered all Israel together, a wente ouer Iordane, and came to Helam, a the Syrians prepared them selues against Dauid to fighte with him, howbeit the Syrians fled before Israel. And Dauid slewe of the Syrians seuë hundreth charettes, g fortye thousande horsmē, g Sobath the chefe captayne smote he also, so that he dyed there. Whan the kynges which were vnder Adad Eser, sawe, that they were smytten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and were subdued vnto them. And the Syrians were afrayed to helpe the children of Ammon eny more.

The ri. Chapter.

ND whan y years came aboute what a tyme as y kynges vse to go forth, Dauid sent Ioab and his seruaūtes with him, and all Israel, to destroye the children of Ammon, and to laye sege vnto Rabba: but Dauid abode at Ierusalem.

And aboute the euetyde it fortuned that Dauid arose from his restinge place, a wente vp to § toppe of the kynges palace, and from v toppe he sawe a woman *waszshinge hir selfe, and the woman was of a very fayre bewtye. And Dauid sent, and caused to axe what woman it was, and sayde: Is not that Bethseba the doughter of Eliam the wife of Vrias the Hethite? And Dauid sent messaugers, and caused for to fetch her. And whā she was come in vnto him, he laye with her. Neuertheles she halowed hir selfe from hir vnclennes, and turned agayne vuto hir house. And the woma was with childe, and sent, and caused to tell Dauid and to saye: I am with childe. Dauid sent vnto Ioab (saycge:) Sende me Vrias & Hethite. And Ioab sent Vrias vnto Dauid. And whan Vrias came to him, Dauid axed him yf it stode well with Ioab, and with the people and with the battavli.

And David sayde to Vrias: Go downe in B

to thy house, and wash thy fete. And whan Vrias wente out of the kynges palace, the kynges gifte folowed him. And Vrias layed him downe to slepe before the kynges palace gate, where all his lordes seruauntes laye, a wente not downe in to his house. Whan worde came to Dauid: Vrias is not gone downe in to his house, Dauid sayde vnto him : Camest thou not ouer the felde? Why wentest thou not downe in to thy house? Vrias sayde vnto Dauid: The Arke and Israel & Iuda abyde in the tentes: And Ioab my lorde and my lordes seruauntes lye in y felde, and shal I go in to my house to eate and drynke, and to lye with my wife? As truly as thou lyuest, and as truly as thy soule lyueth, I wyll not do this thinge. Dauid sayde vnto Vria: Abyde here then to daye, tomorow wil I let the go. So Vrias abode at Ierusalem the same daye, and the nexte also. And Dauid called him to eate a drynke before him, a made him dronken. And at euen he wente to lye him downe for to slepe vpon his couche with his lordes seruauntes, and wente not downe in to his house.

On the morow wrote Dauid a letter vnto C Ioab, a sent it by Vrias. After this maner wrote he in the letter: Set Vrias in y sorest parte of y batayll, g turne you behynde him, y he maye be slayne. Now wha Ioab layed sege to the cite, he set Vrias in y place, where he knewe y the mightiest men of Armes were. And whan the men of the cite fell out and foughte agaynst Ioab, there fell certayne of v people of Dauids seruauntes. And Vrias the Hethite dyed also.

Then sent loab, and caused to tell § kynge all the matter concernynge the battayll, and comaunded the messaunger, and sayde: Whan thou hast tolde y kynge all the matter concernynge the batayll, and seist that he is wroth, and yf the kynge saye vnto the: Wherfore came ye so nye the cite with the batayll? Knowe ye not how they vse to shute from the wall? * Who smote Abimelech the sonne of Ierubaall? Dyd not a womā cast a pece of a mylstone vpo him from the wall, so that he dyed at Thebez? Why came ye so nye the wall? Then shalt thou saye: Thy seruaunt Vrias the Hethite is deed also.

玬 The messaunger wente his waye, and came and tolde Dauid all together, wherfore Ioab had sent him. And the messaunger sayde vnto Dauid: The men preuayled against vs, and fell out vnto vs in to  $\frac{1}{9}$  felde : and we were vpon them harde at the dore of y porte. And the archers shot from the wall vpon thy seruauntes, and slewe certayne of the kynges seruauntes: and thy seruaunt Vrias the Hethite is deed also.

Dauid sayde vnto the messaunger: Thus shalt thou saye vnto Ioab: Let not y vexe the, for the swerde consumeth now one now another. Go forth with the battayll against the cite, that thou mayest destroye it, and coforte the men. And whan Vrias wife herde that Vrias was deed, she mourned for hir huszbande. But whā she had made an ende of mournynge, Dauid sent, and caused her be fetched vnto his palace, and she became his wyfe, and bare him a sonne. Neuertheles this dede y Dauid dyd, displeased the LORDE.

The rij. Chapter.

ND the LORDE sent Nathan vnto 3 Dauid. Whan he came to him, he tolde him: There were two men in one cite, the one riche, the other poore. The riche man had very many shepe and oxen: but the poore man had nothinge saue one litle shepe, which he had boughte, and norished it, so that it grewe vp with him and his children together. Then sayde Nathan vnto Dauid: Thou art euen the man. And whan thy father commeth to loke how thou doest, saye vnto him : Oh let my sister Thamar come, that she maye fede me, and make a meece of meate before me, that I maye se it, g eate it of hir hande. So Ammon layed him downe, and made him sicke. Now wha the kynge came in to loke how he dyd, Ammon sayde vnto the kynge : Oh let my sister Thamar come, and make me a syppynge or two, and that I maye eate it of hir hande. Then sent Dauid for Thamar in to the house, and sayde vnto her: Go thy waye to thy brother Ammons house, a make him a meece of Thamar wente vnto hir brother meate. Amons house, but he laye in his bed. And she toke floure, and mixte it, and dighte it before his eyes, and made him a syppynge. And she toke the meece of meate, and poured it out before him: but he wolde not eate.
- I And Ammon saide: Put forth euery man fro me. And euery man wete forth from him. Then sayde Ammon vnto Thamar: Brynge me that meece of meate in to the chamber, that I maye eate it of thy hande. Then toke Thamar ŷ syppynge that she had made, and broughte it vnto Ammon hir brother in to the chamber.

And whan she broughte it vnto him  $rac{1}{2}$  he mighte eate, he toke holde of her,  $rac{1}{3}$  sayde vnto her: Come my sister, lye with me. Neuertheles she saide : Oh no my brother, force me not : for so do they not in Israel, do not thou soch foly. Whither shal I go with my shame? And thou shalt be as one of the vnwyse in Israel. But speake vnto the kynge, he shal not withholde me from the.

 Howbeit he wolde not herken vnto her, and ouercame her, *and forced her, and laye with her. And Ammon hated her exceadingly, so that the hate was greater then the loue was before. And Ammon sayde vnto her: Vp, and get the hence.

She saide vnto him : This euell that thou thrustest me out, is greater then the other, that thou hast done vnto me. Neuertheles he herkened not vnto her, but called his boye

And whā his seruaunt had put hir forth, g lockte the dore after her, Thamar strowed aszshes vpon hir heade, and rente the partye garment which she had vpon her, and layed hir hande vpon hir heade, and wente on, and cryed. And hir brother Absalom sayde vnto her: Hath thy brother Ammon bene with the? Now holde thy peace my sister, it is thy brother, and take not the matter so to hert.

So Thamar remayned a wyddowe in her brother Absaloms house. And whan kynge Dauid herde of all this, he was very sory. As for Absalom, he spake nether euell ner good to Ammon: but Absalom hated Ammon, because he had forced his sister Thamar.

After two yeares had Absalom shepe clyppers at Baal Hazor, which lyeth by Ephraim. And Absalom called all the kynges children, and came to the kynge, and sayde: Beholde, thy seruaunt hath shepe clyppers, let it please  $\hat{y}$  kynge with his seruauntes to go with his seruaunte. But the kynge sayde vnto Absalom: No my sonne, let vs not all go, lest we be to chargeable vnto the.

And he wolde nedes haue had him to go, howbeit he wolde not, but blessed him. Absalom sayde: Shall my brother Ammon go with vs then? The kynge sayde vnto him: Wherfore shall he go with the? Then was Absalom so importune vpon him, that he let Ammon and all the kynges childre go with him.

But Absalom commaunded his yonge men, and sayde: Take hede whan Ammon is mery with wyne (and I saye vnto you: Smyte Ammon, and slaye him) that ye be not afrayed: for I haue commaunded you, be stronge, and playe the men. So Absaloms yonge men dyd vnto Ammon, as Absalom had commaunded them. Then stode all the kynges children vp, and euery one gat him vp vpō his Mule, and fled. And whyle they were yet on their waye, the rumoure came to kynge Dauid, that Absalom had slayne all the kynges children, so that not one of them was lefte.

Then stode the kynge vp, and rente his clothes,  $\alpha$  layed him downe vpon the earth, and all his seruautes that stode aboute him,

Then sayde the kynge vnto Ioab: Beholde, I haue done this: go thy waye therfore and brynge the childe Absalom agayne.

Then fell Ioab vpon his face vnto the grounde, and worshipped, and thanked the kynge, and sayde: This daye doth thy seruaunt perceaue, that I haue founde grace in thy syghte my lorde the kynge, in that the kynge doth as his seruaunt hath sayde. So Ioab gat him vp, and wente vnto Gesur, and broughte Absalom to Ierusalem. But the kinge sayde: Let him go againe in to his house, and not se my face. Thus Absalom came agayne to his house, and sawe not  $\hat{y}$  kynges face.

But in all Israel there was not so fayre, and so maruelous goodly a man, as Absalom. From the sole of his fote vnto the toppe of his heade there was not one blemysh in him. And whan his heade was rounded (that was comonly euery yeare, for it was to heuy for him, so that it must nedes haue bene rounded) the heer of his heade weyed two hūdreth Sicles after $ kynges weight. And vnto Absalom there were borne thre sonnes and one doughter, whose name was Thamar, and she was a woman of a fayre bewtye: So Absalom abode two yeare at Ierusalem, and sawe not the kynges face.

And Absalom sent for Ioab, that he mighte sende him to the kynge. And he wolde not come to him. But he sent the seconde tyme, yet wolde he not come. Then sayde he vnto his seruauntes: Ye knowe Ioabs pece of londe that lyeth by myne, and he hath barlye theron: go youre waye therfore and set fyre vpon it. So Absaloms seruauntes sett fyre vpon Ioabs pece of londe.

Then Ioab gat him vp, and came to Absalom in to the house, and sayde vnto him: Wherfore haue thy seruauntes set fire vpon my pece of londe? Absalō sayde vnto Ioab: Beholde, I sent for the, and caused to save vnto the: Come hither, that I maye sende the to the kynge, and to saye: Wherfore came I from Gesur? It were better for me that I were there yet. Let me therfore se the kynges face. But yf there be eny trespace in me, then put me to death. And Ioab wente in to the kynge, and tolde him. And he called Absalom, to come in to the kynge, and he worshipped vpon his face to the grounde before the kynge. And the kynge kyssed Absalom.

The rb. Chapter.

ND after this it fortuned that Absalom caused to prepare himselfe chearettes and horses, and fyftye men, which were his fote mē. And Absalō gat him vp allwaye early in the mornynge, and stode in the waye by the porte : and whan eny man had a matter which shulde come to the kynge for iudgment, Absalom called vnto him and sayde : Of what cite art thou? Yf he sayde then : thy seruaunt is of one of the trybes of Israel, then sayde Absalom vnto him : Beholde, thy matter is righte and plaine : but there is noman appoynted ŷ of the kynge to heare the.

And Absalom sayde: O who setteth me to be iudge in  $\mathring{y}$  londe, that euery man which hath a plee or matter to do in  $\mathring{y}$  lawe, might come to me, that I might helpe him to right. After  $\mathfrak{B}$ this maner dyd Absalom vnto all Israel whan they came to the lawe vnto the kynge, and so dyd he steale awaye the hert of  $\mathring{y}$  men of Israel.

After fortye yeares sayde Absalom vnto the kynge: I wil go and perfourme my vowe at Hebron, which I made vnto the LORDE. For thy seruaunt made a vowe, * whan I dwelt at Gesur in Siria, and saide: Whan ŷ LORDE bryngeth me agayne to Ierusalem, I shal do a Gods seruyce vnto the LORDE. The kynge sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in peace. And he gat him vp, and wente vnto Hebron.

ND whan Dauid was gone a lytle by A from the toppe of the mount, beholde, Siba the seruaut of Mephiboseth met him with a couple of asses sadled, wheron were two hundreth loaues of bred, and an hundreth quantities of rasyns and an hudreth quantities of fygges, and a bottell of wyne. Then sayde the kynge vnto Siba: What wilt thou do herewith? Siba sayde : The asses shalbe for the kynges housholde to ryde vpon, and the loaues and fygges for the yonge men to eate, and the wyne shallbe for them to drynke whan they are weery in the wyldernes. The kynge sayde: Where is thy lordes sonne? Siba savde vnto the kynge: Beholde, he abydeth at Ierusalē, for he saide: To daye shal y house of Israel restore my fathers kigdome vnto me. The kynge saide vnto Siba: Beholde, *all that Mephiboseth hath, shalbe thine. Siba sayde with reuerence, Let me finde grace in thy sight my lorde O kynge.

But whan kynge Dauid came to Bahurim, 36 beholde, there wente out a man of the kynred of the house of Saul, twhose name was Semei the sonne of Gera, which wente forth and ‡cursed, and cast stones at Dauid, and at all kynge Dauids seruauntes and all the people and all the mightie men were at his righte hande and at his lefte. And the kynge came in and all the people that was with him, weery, and refreshed himselfe there. But Absalom and all the people of the men of Israel came to Ierusalem and Achitophel with him. Whan Chusai the Arachite Dauids frende came in to Absalom, he sayde vnto Absalom: God saue the kynge God saue the kynge.

Absalom sayde vnto Chusai: Is this thy 39 mercy vnto thy frende? Why art thou not gone with thy frende? Chusai sayde vnto Absalom: Not so, but loke whom the LORDE choseth, and this people, and all the men in Israel, his wyl I be, and byde with him. Secondly, whom shulde I serue? Shulde I not do seruyce before his sonne? Like as I haue serued in the presence of thy father, so wyll I do seruyce before the also.

And Absalom sayde vnto Achitophel: Geue vs youre councell what we shal do? Achitophel sayde vnto Absalom : || Go lye with thy fathers concubynes, whom he hath lefte to kepe the house, so shall all Israel heare that thou hast made thy father to stynke, and the hande of all them that are with y, shal be the bolder. But this is my coucell, that thou gather together all Israel from Dan vnto Berseba in nombre as the sonde of the See, and go thou thine owne person amonge them, then wil we fall vpon him in what place we finde him, and wyll ouerwhelme him euen as the dew falleth vpon the earth, so that we shal not leave one of him and of all his men. But yf he resorte in to a cite, then shal all Israel cast roapes aboute the same cite, and drawe it in to the river, so that there shal not one stone of it be founde.

Then sayde Absalom and euery man in Israel: The councell of Chusai the Arachite is better then Achitophels councell.

But the LORDE broughte it so to passe, that § good councell of Achitophel was hyndred, that the LORDE mighte brynge euell vpon Absalom.

- And Chusai sayde vnto Sadoc a Abiathar the prestes : Thus and thus hath Achitophel counceled Absalom and the Elders in Israel: but so and so have I counceled. Sende now therfore in all the haist, and tell Dauid, and ND it was tolde Ioab: beholde,  $\mathring{y}$  kinge wepeth  $\mathfrak{g}$  mourneth for Absalom. And so out of  $\mathring{y}$  victory of  $\mathring{y}$  daye there came a mourninge amonge all the people. For the people had herde the same daye,  $\mathring{y}$  the kynge toke on heuely because of his sonne. And  $\mathring{y}$ people stale awaye the same daye, so that they came not in to the cite: as a people that is put to shame, pycketh them selues awaye, whan they are fled in a battayll. As for the kynge, he had couered his face, and cryed loude, and sayde: Oh my sonne Absalom, Absalom my sonne, my sonne. But Ioab came to the kynge in to the house, and sayde: This daye hast thou shamed all thy seruauntes (which haue delyuered thy soule this daye, and the soules of thy sonnes, of thy doughters, of thy wyues, and of thy  $c\bar{c}cubynes$ ) in that thou louest them that hate the, and hatest those that loue  $\hat{y}$ . For to daye thou shewest thyselfe, that thou carest not for the captaynes and seruauntes: For I perceaue this daye, that yf Absalom onely were alyue, and we all deed this daye, thou woldest thynke it were well.

Gét the vp now therfore, and go forth, and  $\mathfrak{B}$ speake louyngly vnto thy seruauntes. For I sweare vnto the by  $\mathfrak{F}$  LORDE, yf thou go not forth, there shall not be lefte the one man this nighte: this shalbe worse vnto  $\mathfrak{F}$ , then all the euell that happened the sence thy youth vp hither to. The the kynge gat him vp, and sat in the gate. And it was sayde vnto the people: beholde, the kynge sytteth in the gate. Then came all the people before  $\mathfrak{F}$  kynge. But Israel was fled euery one vnto his tent.

And all the people stroue in all the trybes of Israel, and sayde: The kynge ryd vs from the hande of oure enemies, and delyuered vs from the hande of the Philistynes, and was fayne to fle out of the lode for Absalom. So Absalom whom we had anoynted ouer vs, is deed in the battayll. Why are ye so styll now, that ye fetch not the kynge agayne?

The kynge sent vnto Sadoc  $\mathfrak{C}$  Abiathar the prestes,  $\mathfrak{C}$  caused to saye vnto thē: Speake to the Elders of Iuda,  $\mathfrak{C}$  saye: Why wyl ye be the last to fetch the kynge agayne vnto his house? (for  $\mathfrak{F}$  sayenge of all Israel was come before the kynge in to his house) ye are my brethren, my bone, and my flesh. Wherfore wyl ye then be the last to brynge the kynge agayne? And saye vnto Amasa: Art not thou my bone and my flesh? God do this  $\mathfrak{C}$ that vnto me, yf thou shalt not be the chefe captayne before me in Ioabs steade, as longe as thou lyuest.

And he bowed the hert of all the men of Iuda as of one man. And they sent vnto  $\hat{y}$ kynge: Come agayne, thou and all thy seruauntes: So the kynge came agayne. And whan he came vnto Iordane,  $\hat{y}$  men of Iuda were come to Gilgal, for to go downe to mete the kynge, that they mighte brynge  $\hat{y}$  kynge ouer Iordane. departed from the cite, euery one vnto his tent. But Ioab came agayne to Ierusalem vnto the kynge.

* Ioab was captayne ouer all the hoost of Israel: Benaia § sonne of Ioiada was ouer the Chrethians and Plethians: Adoram was rent gatherer: Iosaphat the sonne of Ahilud was Chaunceler: Seia was the scrybe: Sadoc and Abiathar were the prestes: Ira also § Iairite was Dauids prest.

The pri. Chapter.

THERE was a derth also in Dauids tyme a l thre yeares together. And Dauid soughte the face of § LORDE. And the LORDE savde: Because of Saul and because of that bloudy housholde + y he slewe the Gibeonites. Then the kynge caused for to call the Gibeonites, and spake vnto them. (As for the Gibeonites, they were not of  $\psi$ children of Israel, but a remnaunt of the Amorites: howbeit the children of Israel had sworne vnto the, and Saul soughte for to smyte them in his gelousy, for the childre of Israel and Iuda.) Then sayde Dauid to the Gibeonites: What shal I do vnto you? And where withall shal I make the attonement, that ye maye blesse v enheritaunce of v LORDE? The Gibeonites sayde vnto him: It is not for golde and syluer that we haue to do with Saul and his house, nether haue we oughte to do for to slaye eny mā in Israel. B

He sayde: What saye ye then, that I shal do vnto you? They sayde vnto y kynge: The man that hath destroyed vs and broughte vs to naughte, shulde we destroye, that nothinge be lefte him in all the coastes of Israel. Let there be geuen vs seuen men of his sonnes, that we maye hange them vp vnto the LORDE at Gibea of Saul the chosen of the LORDE. The kynge sayde: I wyll geue them. Howbeit the kynge spared Mephiboseth y sonne of Ionathas y sonne of Saul, because of the ooth of the LORDE  $\dot{v}$  was betwene them: § namely, betwene Dauid a Ionathas the sonne of Saul. But the two sonnes of Rispa & doughter of Aia, whom she had borne vnto Saul, Armoni a Mephiboseth, And the fyue sonnes of Michol the doughter of Saul, whom she bare vnto Adriel the sonne of Barsillai the Mahalothite, dyd

So these seuen fell at one tyme, and dyed  $\mathbb{C}$ in the tyme of the first haruest, whan  $\mathring{y}$  barly haruest begynneth. Then toke Rispa the doughter of Aia a sack cloth,  $\mathfrak{q}$  spred it vpon the rock in the begynnynge of the haruest, tyll the water from the heauen dropped vpō them, and suffred not the foules of the heauen to rest on them on the daye tyme, nether the wylde beestes of the felde on the nighte season. And it was tolde Dauid what Rispa the doughter of Aia Sauls concubyne had done.

And Dauid wente and toke the bones of Saul and the bones of Ionathas his sonne from  $\hat{y}$  citesens at Iabes in Gilead (which they  $\|$  had stollen from  $\hat{y}$  strete at Bethsan, where  $\hat{y}$  Philistynes had hanged the, what tyme as the Philistynes had smytten Saul vpon mount Gilboa) and broughte them vp from thence, and gathered them together with the bones of them that were hanged. And the bones of Saul and of his sonne Ionathas buried they in  $\hat{y}$  londe of Ben Iamin, besyde  $\hat{y}$  graue of his father Cis. So after this was God at one with the londe.

But there arose warre agayne of § Philis-And Dauid wente tynes agaynst Israel. downe a his seruauntes with him, a foughte agaynst the Philistynes. And Dauid was weery, a Ieszbi of Nob (which was one of the children of Rapha, and the weight of his speare was thre C. weight of brasse, and had a new harnesse vpon him) thoughte to smyte Neuertheles Abisai the sonne of Dauid. Zeru Ia helped him, a smote the Philistyne to death. Then sware Dauids men vnto him, g sayde : Thou shalt nomore go forth with vs vnto the warre, that the lanterne in Israel be not put out.

** Afterwarde there arose yet warre at Nob with the Philistynes. Then Sibechai the Husathite smote Saph, which also was one of the childrē of Rapha.

And there arose yet warre at Gob with the Philistynes. Then Elhanan the sonne of Iaere Orgim a Bethleemite smote Goliath the Gethite, which had a speare, whose shaft was like a weeuers lome.

And there arose yet warre at Gath, where

The first Chapter.

ND whā kinge Dauid was olde g well stryckē in age, he coulde not be warme, though he was couered with clothes. Then sayde his seruauntes vnto him : Let vs seke a yonge damsell a virgin for oure lorde the kynge, to stonde before the kynge, and to norish him, a to slepe in his armes, and to And they warme oure lorde the kynge. sought a fayre dasell in all the coastes of Israel, and founde Abisag of Sunem, and And she was a brought her vnto y kynge. very fayre damsell, and noryshed y kynge, and serued him. Howbeit the kynge knewe her not.

Adonias y sonne of Hagith lifte vp himselfe, and sayde : I wyl be kynge. And he prepared him charettes and horsmen, and fyftie men to be renners on fote before him. And his father reproued hi not therfore, so moch as to save: Wherfore doest thou so? And he was a man of a very fayre bewtye * and he had begotten him nexte after Absalo. And his matter stode by Ioab y sonne of Zeru Ia and by Abiathar the prest, which helped Adonias. But Sadoc the prest, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and Nathan the prest and Semei and Rei, and Dauids Worthies were not with Adonias.

And whā Adonias offred shepe and oxē, and fat catell besyde the stone of Soheleth, which lyeth by the twell of Rogel, he called all his brethre the kynges sonnes, and all the men of Iuda the kynges seruaūtes. But the prophet Nathan and Benaia, and the Worthies, and his brother Salomon called he not. Then sayde Nathan vnto Bethseba Salomons mother: Hast thou not herde y Adonias is kynge, and oure lorde Dauid knoweth not therof? Come now therfore, I wyll geue the councell, that thou mayest delyuer thy soule and the soule of thy sonne Salomon. Come now and go in to kinge Dauid and saye vnto him: Hast not thou my lorde the kynge sworne and sayde vnto thy handmayden: Salomon thy sonne shall be kynge after me, and he shall sytt vpon my seate? Why is then Adonias made kynge? Beholde, while thou art yet there, and talkest with the kynge, I wyll come in after the, and tell forth thy tayle. And Bethseba wente in to the kynge to y chamber.

And the kynge was very olde. And Abisag of Sunem serued the kynge. And Bethseba bowed hirselfe, and worshipped the kynge.

The kynge sayde: What wilt thou? She C sayde vnto him : My lorde, Thou hast sworne vnto thy handmayde by the LORDE thy God: Thy sonne Salomon shall be kynge after me and syt vpon my seate. But now lo, Adonias is kynge, and my lorde the kynge knoweth it not. He hath offred oxen and fat catell, and many shepe, and hath called all the kynges sonnes, and Abiathar the prest, and Ioab the chefe captayne. But thy seruaunt Salomon hath he not bydden. Neuertheles thou my lorde art kynge, the eyes of all Israel loke vnto the, that thou shuldest shewe them who shall syt vpon the seate of my lorde the kynge And wha my lorde the kynge after the. slepeth with his fathers then shal I and my sonne Salomon be fayne to be synners.

But whyle she yet spake to the kynge, the prophet Nathan came, and she tolde y kinge: beholde, there is the prophet Nathan. And whan he came in before the kynge, he worshipped the kynge vpon his face to the grounde, and sayde My lorde O kynge, hast thou saide: Adonias shal be kinge after me, a syt vpo my seate? For he is gone downe this daye, and hath offred oxen, and fat catell, g hath called all the kynges sonnes, and the captaynes, and the prest Abiathar. And beholde, they eate and drynke before him, and saye: God saue the kynge Adonias. But me thy seruaunt, 29 and Sadoc the prest, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and thy seruaunt Salomon hath he not called. Hath my lorde the kynge commaunded this, and not certifyed his seruauntes who shall sytt vpon the seate of my lorde the kynge after him?

The kinge answered and saide: Call Beth-And she came in before the seba vnto me. kinge. And whan she stode before the kynge, the kynge sware and sayde: As truly as the LORDE lyueth (which hath delyuered my soule out of trouble,) I wyl do vnto the this daye, euen as I sware vnto the by the LORDE the God of Israel, so that Salomon thy sonne shalbe kynge after me, and he shal sit vpon my seate in my steade.

Then Bethseba bowed hir selfe with hir face to the grounde, and thanked the kynge and sayde: God saue my lorde kynge Dauid for euermore. And the kynge sayde: Call me the prest Sadoc a the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the sonne of Ioiada.

And whan they came in before the kynge, £ the kynge sayde vnto them: Take youre lordes seruauntes with you, and set my sonne Salomon vpon my Mule, and cary him downe to Gihon: and let Sadoc y prest and the prophet Nathan, anoynte him there to be kynge ouer Israel, and blowe the trompe, and save : God saue kynge Salomon, and go ye vp after him : and whan he commeth, he shal syt vpo my scate, and be kynge in my steade: for I have ordeyned him to be prynce ouer Israel and Juda. Then answered Benaia the sonne of loiada vnto the kynge, g sayde: Amen. The LORDE God of my lorde the kynge saye thus also. As the LORDE hath bene with my lorde the kynge, so be he with Salomon also, that his seate maye be greater then the seate of my lorde kynge Dauid.

Then wente they downe, the prest Sadoc and the prophet Nathan, and Benaia the sonne of loiada, and the Chrethians, g Plethians, g wet Salomon vpon kynge Dauids Mule, g broughte him to Gihon. And Sadoc the prest toke the oyle horne out of the Tabernacle, and anoynted Salomon. And they blewe the trompe: And all § people sayde: God saue kynge Salomon.

And all the people wente vp after him, and the people pyped with pypes, and was very ioyfull, so that the earth range at the noyse of them. And Adonias herde it, and all they whom he had called, which were with him, and they had new eaten. And whan Ioab herde the noyse of the trompe, he sayde: What meaneth this noyse of the cite and this busynes? But whyle he yet spake, beholde, Ionathas the sonne of Abiathar ŷ prest came.

And Adonias sayde: Come in, for thou art a valeaunt man, and bryngest good tydinges. Ionathas answered and sayde vnto Adonias: Alas, oure lorde kynge Dauid hath made Salomon kynge, and hath sent with him Sadoc the prest, and the prophet Nathan, and Bemain the sonne of Ioiada, and the Chrethians and Plethians, and they haue set him vpon the kynges Mule: and Sadoc & prest with the prophet Nathan hath anoynted him kynge at Gihon, and from thece are they gone vp with ioye, that the cite range with all: that is the noyse that ye have herde.

Salomon also sytteth vpō the kynges seate, and the kynges seruauntes are gone in to wysh good lucke vnto oure lorde kynge Dauid, and haue sayde: Thy God make Salomon a better name then thy name is, and make his seate greater then thy seate. And they haue wyszshed the kynge good lucke vpon the bed. Morouer  $\vartheta$  kynge hath sayde thus: Praysed be  $\vartheta$  LORDE God of Israel, which this daye hath made one to syt vpon my seate, that myne eyes haue sene it.

Then were they afrayed, and gatt them yp all that were called by Adonias, and so they departed every man his waye. But Adonias was afrayed of Salomon, and gat him vp, and wête his waye, a toke holde of \$ hornes of \$ altare. And it was tolde Salomon : beholde, Adonias feareth kynge Salomõ, a beholde, he taketh holde of the hornes of  $\psi$  altare,  $\alpha$  sayeth: Let kige Salomo sweare vnto me this daye, that he shall not slaye his seruaunt with the swerde. Salomon sayde: Yf he wil be an honest man, there shall not one heer fall from him vpon the earth: but yf there be euell founde in him, he shall dye. And kinge Salomö sent, and caused him to be fetched \* from the altare. And whan he came, he fell downe before kynge Salomon. But Salomon sayde vnto him: Go thy waye in to thy house.

The ij. Chapter.

TOW whan the tyme came that Dauid A Shulde dye, he commaunded Salomon his sonne, and sayde: "I go the waye of all the worlde, Be thou stroge therfore, and shewe thyselfe a man, and kepe the watch of the LORDE thy God, that thou walke in his wayes, and holde his ordinaunces, his commaundementes, his lawes, and his testimonies, tas it is written in the lawe of Moses, that thou mayest be wyse in all that thou doest, and whither so euer thou turnest the: that the LORDE maye rayse vp his worde, which he hath spoke ouer me, and saide : Yf thy children kepe their waye and walke before me faithfully and truly and with all their hert and with all their soule, the shal there neuer fayle the a man vpon the seate of Israel.

The kinge saide vnto him: Do as he hath spoken, and slaye him, and bury him, that thou mayest put fro me and my fathers house the bloude which loab hath shed with out a cause, and that the LORDE maye recompence him his bloude vpon his heade, because he smote two men, which were more righteous and better then he, and slewe them with y swerde that my father Dauid knewe not of: namely, *Abner & sonne of Ner the chefe captaine ouer Israel, c Amasa the sonne of lether y chefe captaine ouer Iuda "y their bloude maye be recompensed vpo y heade of loab and of his sede for euer: but Dauid and his sede, his house and his seate haue peace for euermore of the LORDE.

F And Benaia the sonne of Ioiada wente vp, and smote him, and slewe him:  $\mathfrak{g}$  he was buried in his house in the wyldernes. And  $\mathfrak{F}$ kynge set Benaia  $\mathfrak{F}$  sonne of Ioiada in his steade ouer the hoost. And  $\dagger$  Sadoc  $\mathfrak{F}$  prest dyd the kynge set in the steade of Abiathar.

And the kynge sent, and caused for to call Semei, and sayde vnto him: Buylde the an house at Ierusalem, and dwell there, and departe not from thence, nether hither ner thither. In what daye so euer thou departest forth, and goest ouer ŷ broke Cedron, be thou sure, that thou shalt dye the deeth: thy bloude be vpon thy heade. Semei sayde vnto the kynge: This is a good meanynge, as my lorde the kynge hath sayde, so shal thy seruaunt do. So Semei dwelt at Ierusalem a longe season. But after thre yeare it fortuned that two seruauntes ranne awaye from Semei vnto Achis the sonne of Maecha kynge of Gath.

And it was tolde Sennei: beholde, thy seruauntes are at Gath. Then Semei gat him vp, and sadled his asse, and wete vnto Gath to Achis, for to seke his seruautes. And wha he came thither, he broughte his seruauntes from Gath.

And it was tolde Salomon, that Semei acute from Ierusalem vnto Gath, and was come agayne. Then sent the kynge, and caused for to call Semei, and sayde vnto him: Sware not I to the by the LORDE, and assured the, and sayde: Loke what daye so even thou departest out and goest hither or thather, be sure that thou shalt dye the death? And thou saydest vnto me: I have herde a good meanynge. Why hast thou not kepte the then acordinge to the ooth of the LORDE, and commaundement that I commaunded the?

And the kynge sayde vnto Semei: Thou remembrest all  $\hat{y}$  wickednes, which thy hert knoweth ‡ that thou dyddest vnto my father Dauid. The LORDE hath recompenced  $\hat{y}$ thy wickednes vpon thy heade. And kynge Salomon is blessed, and the seate of Dauid shalbe stablished before  $\hat{y}$  LORDE for euer. And the kynge commaunded Benaia  $\hat{y}$  sonne of Ioiada, which wente forth, and smote him that he dyed. And the kyngdome was stablished by Salomons hande.

The iij. Chapter.

A ND Salomon made mariage with Pharao the kynge of Egipte, g toke Pharaos doughter, and broughte her in to the cite of Dauid, tyll he had buylded his house, and the LORDES house, and the walles rounde aboute Ierusalem. But the people offred yet vpon the hye places: for as yet there was no house buylded vnto the name of the LORDE vnto that tyme. But Salomon loued the LORDE, and walked after the ordinaunces of Dauid his father: excepte onely that he offred and brent incense vpon the hye places.

§ And the kynge wente vnto Gibeon, to do sacrifice there: for that was a goodly hyp place. And Salomon offred a thousande burntofferynges vpon the same altare. # And the LORDE appeared vnto Salomon at Gibeon in a dreame of the nighte, and God sayde: Axe what I shal geue ŷ. Salomō saide: Thou hast done greate mercy vnto my father Dauid thy seruaunt. Like as he walked before the in faithfulnes and righteousnes, and in a true hert with the, g this greate mercy hast thou layed vp for him, and geuen him a sonne to syt vpon his seate, as it is now come to passe.

"Now LORDE my God, thou hast made 13thy seruaunt kynge in my father Dauids steade: As for me, I am but a small yonge man, knowynge nether my outgoynge ner ingoynge. And thy seruaunt is amonge the people whom thou hast chosen: which is so greate, that no man can nombre them ner descrybe them for multitude. Aloth. Iosaphat the sonne of Paruha in Isachar. Semei the sonne of Ela in Ben Iamin. Geber the sonne of Vri in the londe of Gilead, in the londe of Sihon kynge of the Amorites, and of Og the kynge in Basan. One officer was in the same londe. As for Iuda and Israel, they were in nombre as the sonde of the see, and ate and dronke, and were mery. *Thus was Salomō lorde ouer all the kyngdomes (from the water of the londe of the Philistynes, vnto the border of Egipte) which broughte him giftes, and serued him as longe as he lyued.

And Salomon had daylie to his vytayles thirtye quarters of fyne meel, thre score quarters of other meel, ten fat oxen, and twëty small catell, and an hundreth shepe, beside hartes and Roes, and wilde goates, and fat capons, and foules. For he had the lordshippe of all the londe on this syde the water, fro Tiphsa vnto Gasa, and ouer all  $\vartheta$  kynges on this syde  $\vartheta$  water:  $\mathfrak{g}$  had peace of all his subiectes rounde aboute, so that Iuda and Israel dwelt safe, euery one vnder his vyne, and vnder his figge tre, from Dan vnto Berseba, as longe as Salomon lyued.

And Salomō had fortye thousande cart horses, and twolue thousande horsmen. And the officers prouyded the kynge Salomon with vytayles: and what soeuer belonged to the kynges table, that brought euery man in his moneth, and myssed not: Barlye also  $\mathfrak{g}$ strawe for the horses and coursers,  $\mathfrak{g}$  broughte them vnto the place where  $\mathfrak{F}$  kynge was, euery one after his charge.

C And the LORDE gaue Salomon wyszdome, acordynge as he had saýde vnto him,  $\mathfrak{g}$  there was peace betwene Hiram and Salomon, and they made a couenaunt both together. And Salomon made an outchosynge (of workmen) thorow out all Israel. And  $\mathfrak{F}$  outchosynge was thirtie thousande mē, and he sent thē to mount Libanus euery two monethes ten thousande, so that they were one moneth vpon Libanus, and two monethes at home. And \* Adoniram was ouer the outchosynge.

And Salomon had thre score thousande  $\mathfrak{q}$ ten that bare burthens,  $\mathfrak{q}$  foure score thousande that hewed tymber vpon the mount, besyde Salomons chefe officers, which were ordeyned ouer the worke : namely thre thousande and thre hundreth, which ruled  $\mathfrak{P}$  people that laboured there in the worke. And  $\mathfrak{P}$ kynge commaunded, that they shulde breake out greate and costly stones, namely fre stone, for the foundacion of the house. And Salomons masons, and Hirams, and they that were in those coastes, hewed out  $\mathfrak{q}$  prepared tymbre and stones to the buyldinge of the house.

The bi. Chapter.

A I N the foure hundreth and foure score yeare after the "departinge of the children of Israel out of the londe of Egipte, in the fourth yeare of the raigne of Salomon ouer Israel, in the moneth Sif ( $\dot{y}$  is the seconde moneth) was the house buylded vnto the LORDE. This house that kynge Salomon buylded vnto  $\dot{y}$  LORDE, was thre score cubytes löge, twenty cubytes brode,  $\mathfrak{q}$  thirtie cubites hye. And he buylded a † Porche before the temple of twentye cubytes longe after the bredth of the house,  $\mathfrak{q}$  ten cubites brode before the house. And in  $\ddot{y}$  house he made wyndowes, which might be opened and shut with lyddes.

And rounde aboute by the wall of  $\mathring{y}$  house he buylded a compase, so  $\mathring{y}$  it wente both aboute the temple and the quere, and made his outwarde wall roūde aboute. The nether most stacion was fyue cubytes wyde, and  $\mathring{y}$ myddest sixe cubites wyde, and the thirde seuen cubites wyde. For he layed balkes rounde aboute the house, that they touched not  $\mathring{y}$  wall of the house.

And whan ŷ house was buylded, it was buylded of whole and outbroken stones, so  $\dot{y}$ there was herde nether hammer ner axe, ner eny other instrument of yron, whan the house was a buyldinge.

But on the righte syde of the myddes of the house there was a dore, so  $\dot{y}$  they might go vp to the myddest stacion by a turne grese,  $\mathfrak{g}$  from the myddest stacion vnto  $\dot{\mathfrak{g}}$  thirde. Thus buylded he the house,  $\mathfrak{g}$  fynished it,  $\mathfrak{g}$ syled  $\dot{\mathfrak{g}}$  house both aboue  $\mathfrak{g}$  by the walles with Ceder wodd. He buylded a galery also aboue vpon the whole house fyue cubytes hye, and couered the house with Ceder tymber.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto Salomon,  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde: Let this be the house  $\dot{\mathfrak{y}}$ thou buyldest. Yf thou shalt walke in myne ordinaunces,  $\mathfrak{g}$  do acordinge to my lawes,  $\mathfrak{g}$ kepe all my comaundementes, to walke therin, then wyl I stablyszshe my worde with  $\dot{\mathfrak{y}}$ , (‡ as I sayde vnto Dauid thy father)  $\mathfrak{g}$  wyll dwell amonge the childre of Israel, and wil not forsake my people of Israel.

Thus Salomon buylded the house,  $\mathfrak{g}$  fynished it,  $\mathfrak{g}$  buylded the walles on the insyde with Ceder tymber, from the grounde of  $\mathfrak{F}$ house vnto the rofe, and syled it with tymbre on the ynsyde, and ouerlayed the floore of  $\mathfrak{F}$ house with bordes of Pyne tre.

And behynde in the house he buylded a wall of Ceder tymber twentye cubytes longe, from the floore vnto the rofe. And there on the ynsyde buylded he the quere for the most holy. But the house of the temple before the quere was fortye cubites longe: on the ynsyde was the whole house of Ceder with throwne knoppes and floures, so that there was no stone sene. As for the quere, he prepared it on the ynsyde of the house, that the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE might be set therin. And before the quere (which was twentye cubites longe, twentye cubytes brode, and twentye cubytes hye, and ouerlayed with pure golde) he syled the altare with Ceder.

And Salomon ouerlayed the house on  $\mathring{y}$ ynsyde with pure golde,  $\mathfrak{g}$  shot barres of golde before the quere, which he had ouerlayed with golde, so that  $\mathring{y}$  whole house was layed ouer with golde. And all the altare also before  $\mathring{y}$ quere ouerlayed he with golde.

§ He made also in the quere two Cherubins

ten cubites hye of Olyue tre. One wynge of ether of the Cherubs had fyue cubytes, so that from the edge of his one wynge to the edge of his other wynge there were ten cubytes. Eucn so had the other Cherub ten cubites also, and both the Cherubs were of one measure and of one quantitie so y ether Cherub was ten cubites hye. And he put the Cherubins within in the house. And the Cherubins spred forth their wynges, so that the wynge of the one touched the one wall, and the other Cherubs wynge touched the other wall. But in the myddes of § house the one wynge And he ouerlayed the touched another. Cherubins with golde.

And on all the walles of the house rounde 蹇 aboute, he caused to make carued worke, with carued Cherubins, palme trees, and floures. And the pauement of the house ouerlayed he also with golde plates. And at the intraunce of the quere he made two dores of olyue tre with fyue squared postes, and caused carued worke to be made therof with Cherubins, palme trees and floures, a ouerlayed them with plates of golde. So made he also at the intraunce of the temple, foure squared postes of Olyue tre, and two dores of Pyne tre (so that ether dore had two syde dores one haginge to another) and made carued worke therof, palme trees and floures, right as it was appoynted.

And he buylded a courte also within with thre rowes of fre stone, and with one rowe of playne Ceder tymber.

In the fourth years in the moneth Sif, was the foundacion of the LORDES house layed: and in the eleuenth years in the moneth Bul (that is the eight moneth) was the house fynished as it shulde be, so that they were seven years a buyldinge of it.

The bij. Chapter.

BUT Salomon was a buyldinge his awne house thirtene yeare, a fynished it, namely, he buylded an house of the wodd of Libanus, an hundreth cubites longe, fiftye cubites wyde, a thirtie cubites hye, fourequared with rowes of pilers, and with carued Ceders. And the rofe aboue syled he also with Ceder wodd vpon the fyue a fortie pilers, for one rowe had fyftene pilers, so y there stode ever thre pilers one right over agaynst another: so that every space betwixte the pilers was one over agaynst another foure squared with the pilers.

And he made a porche with pilers which was fiftye cubites longe, and thirtie cubites brode,  $\mathfrak{q}$  yet a porche before it with pilers  $\mathfrak{q}$ with a greate poste. He made a porche also vnto  $\hat{y}$  kynges seate (wherin  $\hat{y}$  iudgment was kepte) and made it to be the porche of iudgment, and syled it with Ceder from the pauement vnto the pauement agayne, and his owne house wherin he dwelt, in  $\hat{y}$  back courte made betwene  $\hat{y}$  house and the porche like the other. And like vnto the porche made he a house for Pharaos doughter, \*whom Salomon had taken to wife.

All these were costly stone hewen after  $\hat{y}$  measure, cut with sawes on euery syde, from the grounde vnto the rofe: and without the greate courte also. As for the foundacions, they were costly and greate stones, ten and eighte cubites greate: and costly fre stones theron acordinge to  $\hat{y}$  measure, and Ceders. But the greate courte rounde aboute had thre rowes of fre stone,  $\mathfrak{g}$  one rowe of playne Ceders: Euen so also the courte by  $\hat{y}$  house of the LORDE within, and the porch by the house.

And kynge Salomon sent to fetch one † Hiram of Tyre a wedowes sonne, of the trybe of Nephtali, and his father had bene a man of Tyre, ‡ which was a connynge mā in metall, full of wyszdome, vnderstondinge and knowlege to worke all maner of metall worke. Whan he came to kynge Salomon, he made all his worke, § and made two brasen pilers, ether of them eightene cubites hye: and a threde of xij. cubites was the measure aboute both  $\hat{\mathbf{y}}$  pilers : and he made two knoppes of  $\mathbb{C}$ brasse molten, to set aboue vpon the pilers: and euery knoppe was fyue cubytes hye: and on euery knoppe aboue vpon y pilers seuē wrythen ropes like cheynes. And ypon euery knoppe he made two rowes of pomgranates rounde aboute on one rope, wherwith y knoppe was couered. And the knoppes were like roses before y porche foure cubites greate. And the pomgranates in the rowes rounde aboute were two hudreth aboue and beneth vpon the rope, which wete rounde aboute the thicknes of the knoppe, on euery knoppe vpon both the pilers. And set vp the pilers before the porche of the temple. And that which he set on the right hande, called he Iachin : and that which he set on the lefte hande, called he Boos. And so stode it aboue vpon the pilers euen like roses. Thus was the worke of  $\mathring{y}$  pilers fynished.

And he made a molten lauer ten cubytes wyde from the one syde to the other rounde aboute, and fyue cubites hye, and a threde of thirtie cubites loge was ŷ measure rounde aboute: and aboute the same lauer that was ten cubites wyde, there wente knoppes on the edge therof rounde aboute the lauer. Two rowes were there of the knoppes molten with the lauer.

And it stode vpon twolue bullockes, wherof thre were turned towarde the north, thre towarde the west, thre towarde the south, and thre towarde the east, and the lauer aboue theron, so that all their hynder partes were within vnder the lauer: wherof the thicknesse was an handbreth: and the edge of it was like the edge of a cuppe, and as a floured rose, and it conteyned two thousande *Battes.

And he made ten brasen seates, euery one foure cubites longe and brode, and thre cubites hye. The seate was made so, that it had sydes betwene the ledges. And on the sydes betwene the ledges there were lyons, bullockes and Cherubins. And on $ ledges which were aboue and beneth the lyons and bullockes, were the sydes made so, that they were set downwardes. And euery stole had foure brasen wheles with brasen axeltrees. And vpon the foure corners there were proppes molten, euery one ouer agaynst another, vnderset vnto the kettell.

E And the soket vpon the stole was a cubyte hye and rounde, a cubyte and an halfe wyde: and on the soket there were knoppes in foldes, which were foure squared  $\mathfrak{g}$  not rounde. The foure wheles stode beneth by the sydes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the axeltrees of the wheles were harde on  $\mathfrak{f}$  seate. Euery whele was a cubite and a halfe hye, and they were wheles like cart wheles. And their axeltrees, spokes, nales,  $\mathfrak{g}$  shaftes were all molten. And the foure proppes vpō the foure corners of euery seate were harde on the seate.

And on the soket aboue vpon the seate a cubyte and an halfe rounde aboute, there were ledges and sydes harde on the seate. And on the plat of the same sydes and ledges, he caused to carue Cherubins, lyons and palme trees, one by another rounde aboute theron. After this maner made he ten moltē seates, one maner of measure  $\mathfrak{g}$  widenes was in all.

And he made ten copper kettels, so that  $\mathcal{F}$ one kettell cōteyned fortye Battes, and was foure cubites greate, and vpon euery seate was a kettell. And fyue seates set he on the righte syde of the house, and the other fyue on the lefte syde. But the lauer set he before on the righte hande towarde the south.

And Hiram made pottes also and shouels and basens, a so fynished he all the worke, that kynge Salomon caused to be made in the house of the LORDE: namely y two pilers, and the rounde knoppes aboue vpon the two pilers, and the two wrythen ropes to couer the two rounde knoppes vpon the pilers. And the foure hudreth pomgranates on the two wrythen ropes, euer two rowes of pomgranates vnto euery rope, to couer the two rounde knoppes vpon the pilers. And the ten seates, and ten kettels theron, and the lauer, and twolue bullockes vnder y lauer. And the pottes, shouels and basens. And all the ornamentes which Hiram made vnto kvnge Salomon for the house of the LORDE, were of pure metall. In the countre by Iordane, & caused the kynge them to be molten in thicke earth, betwene Sucoth and Zarthan. And Salomon let all the apparell be vnweyed, because the metall was so moch.

Morouer Salomon made all the apperell that belonged vnto the house of the LORDE: namely a golden altare, a golden table that the shewbred laye on, fyue candelstickes on the righte hande, and fyue candelstickes on the lefte (before the quere) of pure golde, with floures, lampes and snoffers of golde therto, flat peces, charges, basens, spones and censours of pure golde. And the hokes of ŷ dores on the insyde of the house in the most holy, and in the dores of the house of the tēple of the LORDE were of golde.

Thus all the worke that kynge Salomon made in  $\mathring{y}$  house of the LORDE, was fynisshed.  $\dagger$  And Salomon brought in that his father Dauid had sanctified, of syluer and golde and ornamentes, and layed it amonge the treasures of the house of the LORDE.

¬HEN gathered kynge Salomon all 🕏 A | Elders in Israel together, all the rulers of the trybes and prynces of the fathers amonge the children of Israel, vnto Ierusalem, to brynge vp the Arke of the couenaunt of the LORDE, *out of the cite of Dauid, that And there resorted vnto kynge is Sion. Salomon all the men in Israel, at the feast in the moneth Ethanim, that is y seuenth moneth. And whan all & Elders of Israel came, the prestos toke the Arke of the LORDE, and broughte it vp, and the Tabernacle of witnesse, and all the ornamentes of the Sanctuary that were in the Tabernacle. This dyd the prestes and the Leuites. And kynge Salomon and all the congregacion of Israel y were gathered vnto him, wente with him before the Arke, and offred shepe and bullockes, so many, that they could not be nombred ner tolde.

So the prestes broughte the Arke of the LORDES couenaunt vnto hir place, euen in to y Quere of the house in the most holy vnder y wynges of the Cherubins. For y Cherubins spred out their wynges in the place where the Arke stode, and couered the Arke and the staues therof from aboue. And the staues were so loge, that $ knoppes of them were sene from the Sanctuary before y quere, but on the out syde were they not sene, and they were there vnto this daye.

And in the Arke there was nothinge, but onely the two tables of stone, twhich Moses had layed therin at Horeb, whan § LORDE made a couenaunt with the children of Israel, what tyme as they were departed out of the londe of Egipte.

But whan the prestes wente out of the Sanctuary, a cloude fylled the house of the LORDE, so y the prestes coulde not stonde g execute the office for the cloude: for the glory of the LORDE fylled the LORDES house. Then sayde Salomon: # The LORDE sayde, that he wolde dwell in a darke cloude. I haue buylded an house, to be an habitacion vnto the: a seate, y thou mayest dwell there for euer And § kynge turned his face, g blessed all the congregacion of Israel. And all the cogregacion of Israel stode, g he sayde:

Praysed be the LORDE God of Israel, which promised by his mouth vnto my father Dauid, and by his hade hath fulfylled it, and sayde: Sence the daye y I broughte my people of Israel out of Egipte, haue I chosen no cite amoge all the trybes of Israel, to buylde me an house, that my name might be there. But Dauid haue I chosen, to be ouer my people of Israel.

And in dede my father Dauid was mynded to buylde an house vnto the name of the LORDE God of Israel: neuertheles the LORDE sayde vnto my father Dauid: Where as thou wast mynded to buylde an house vnto my name, thou hast done well, that thou art so aduysed. Howbeit thou shalt not buylde the house, but thy sonne which shal come out of thy loynes, he shal buylde an house vnto my name. And the LORDE hath perfourmed his worde that he spake: For I am come vp in my father Dauids steade, and syt vpon the seate of Israel, as the LORDE sayde: and haue buylded an house vnto the name of the LORDE God of Israel: and there have I ordeyned a place for the Arke, wherin is the LORDES couenaunt, which he made with oure fathers, whan he broughte them out of v londe of Egipte.

And Salomon stode before the altare of the LORDE in the presence of the whole congregacion of Israel, and helde out his handes towarde heauen, and sayde : "O LORDE God of Israel, there is no god like the, nether aboue in heauen, ner beneth vpo earth, thou that kepest couenaut and mercy for all thy seruauntes that walke before $ with all their hert, thou that hast kepte promes with my father Dauid thy seruaunt : With thy mouth thou saydest it, and with thy hande hast thou fulfylled it, as it is come to passe this daye. Then shal it be answered : Because they forsoke ý LORDE their God, (which brought their fathers out of the londe of Egipte) and haue receaued other goddes, and worshipped them, and serued them. Therfore hath ý LORDE brought all this euell vpon them.
- Now whan the twentye yeares were ended, C "wherin Salomon buylded the two houses, the LORDES house and the kynges house, † where vnto Hiram the kynge of Tyre brought Salomö Ceder trees g Pyne trees, and golde after all his desyre, then gaue kynge Salomon vnto Hiram twentye cities in the countre of Galile. And Hiram departed from Tyre to vyset the cities which Salomon had geven him, they pleased him not, and he sayde : What maner of cities are these (my brother) that thou hast geuē me? And he called them the londe of Cabul vnto this daye. And Hiram sent vnto the kynge, sixe score hundreth weight of Golde. And the same is the summe of the taxe, that kynge Salomon raysed to the buyldinge of the house of the LORDE, and his awne house, a Millo, and the walles of Ierusalem, and Hasor, and Megiddo, and Gaser.
- For Pharao ŷ kynge of Egipte came vp, and wāne Gaser, g brent it with fyre, g slewe the Cananites ŷ dwelt in the cite, g gaue it for a gifte vnto his doughter Salomōs wife. So Salomon buylded Gaser, g the lower Bethoron, and Baelath and Thamar, in ŷ wyldernes, in the londe, g all the cities of the corne houses that Salomon had, and all the cities of the charettes, g all the cities of the horsmen, and what it pleased him to buylde at Ierusalem, in Libanus, g in euery countre of his domynion.

‡ But of the children of Israel he made no bondmen, but let them be men of warre, and his seruauntes, and prynces, and knightes, and ouer his charettes and horsmē. And the officers which were ouer Salomons busynesse, were fyue hundreth and fyftye, which ruled the people, and perfourmed the worke.

And Pharaos doughter wente vp from the cite of Dauid, in to hir house §which he had buylded for her. ||Then buylded he Millo likewyse. And thre tymes in the yeare dyd Salomon offre burntofferynges and deed offerynges vpon the altare ¶ that he had buylded vnto the LORDE, and burnt incense vpon it before the LORDE, and so was the house ended and fynished.

**And Salomon made shippes also at Ezeon Geber, which lyeth by Eloth besyde the Reed See shore in ŷ londe of the Edomites. And Hiram sent his seruauntes by shippe, which were shipmen, and had experience of the See, with Salomons seruauntes; and they came vnto ++Ophir, and fetched from thence one g twenty score hundreth weight of golde, and brought it vnto Salomon.

The r. Chapter.

ND whan kynge Salomons fame of the A name of the LORDE came to the eares of the 'Quene of riche Arabia, she came to proue him with darke sentences. And she came to Ierusalem with a maruelous greate trayne, with camels which bare spyces, and moch golde, and precious stones. And whan she came in to kynge Salomon, she spake vnto him all that was in hir hert. And Salomon tolde her euerythinge, and the kynge had nothinge in secrete, but he tolde it her. But whan the Quene of riche Arabia sawe all the wyszdome of Salomon, and the house that he had buylded, and the meates of his table, and the dwellinges of his seruauntes, a the offyces of his ministers, and their garmentes, and his butlers and the burntofferynges which he offred in the house of the LORDE, she wondred exceadingly, and coulde no longer refrayne, but sayde vnto the kynge: It is true that I haue herde in my londe of thy behauoure and of thy wyszdome.

abhominacion of the Ammonites. And Salomon dyd m y which displeased the LORDE, and folowed not m y LORDE to m y vttemost as dyd his father Dauid. Thē buylded Salomō an hie place vnto Chamos the abhominaciō of m yMoabites (vpon the mount that lyeth before Ierusalē) and vnto Moloch the abhominacion of the Ammonites.

Thus dyd Salomon for all his outladish B wyues, which brent incense, and offred vnto their goddes. But the LORDE was wroth at Salomon, because his hert was turned asyde from § LORDE God of Israel, *which had two tymes appeared vnto him, and comaunded him, that he shulde not walke after other goddes: and yet kepte he not that the LORDE commaunded him. Therfore sayde the LORDE vnto Salomon: For so moch as this is done with the, and hast not kepte my couenaunt and myne ordinaunces, which I commaunded the, therfore wyll I also plucke thy kyngdome from the, and geue it vnto thy seruaunt: Neuertheles in thy tyme will I not do it, for thy father Dauids sake, but from the hande of thy sonne wyl I plucke it. Howbeit I wyl not plucke y kyngdome cleane awaye. One trybe wyll I geue vnto thy sonne, for Dauid my seruauntes sake, and for Ierusalems sake which I haue chosen.

And the LORDE raysed vp an aduersary vnto Salomon, euen Hadad the Edomite of the kynges sede, which was in Edom. For whan Dauid was in Edom, and Ioab the chefe captayne wente vp to bury the slayne, he smote all the males in Edom. (For Ioab remayned there sixe monethes and all Israel, tyll he had roted out all § males that were in Edom.) Then fled Hadad, and certayne men of § Moabites with him, of his fathers seruauntes. As for Hadad, he was a yonge man.

And they gat them vp fro Madian, and came vnto Paran, and toke men with them out of Paran, and came in to Egipte vnto Pharao the kynge of Egipte: which gaue him an house and certayne vytales appoynted,  $\alpha$  gaue him a countre. And Adad founde greate fauoure in the sighte of Pharao, so that he gaue him to wife euen the sister of his owne wife Thaphenes the Quene. And Thaphenes sister bare him Genubath his sonne, and Thaphenes norished him vp in Pharaos house, in so moch that Genubath was in Pharaos house amonge Pharaos children.

Now whā Hadad herde in Egipte, that Dauid was fallē on slepe with his fathers, and ý Ioab the chefe captayne was deed, he sayde vnto Pharao: Let me go in to my countre. Pharao sayde vnto him: What lackest thou with me, that thou wilt go in to thy countre? He sayde: Nothynge, but yet let me go.

God raysed him vp another aduersary also, one Reson the sonne of El Iada, which fled from his lorde Hadad Eser kynge of Zeba, and gathered men agaynst him, and was a captayne of the men of warre whan Dauid slewe them: and they wente vnto Damascus and dwelt there, and reigned at Damascus, and he was Israels aduersary as loge as Salomon lyued. This is the harme y Hadad suffred: therfore had he euell will at Israel, and was kynge ouer Siria.

Morouer Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat an Ephraite Salomons seruaunt (and his mothers name was Zeruga, a wedowe) lifte vp his hande also agaynst the kynge. And this is the cause wherfore he lifte vp his hande agaynst the kynge: Whan Salomon buylded Millo, he shut vp a gappe in the cite of Dauid his father. And Ieroboam was a mā of armes. And whan Salomon sawe that it was a mete yonge man, he set him ouer all the burthens of the house of Ioseph.

But at the same tyme it fortuned, that Ieroboam wente out from Ierusalem, and the prophet Ahias of Silo founde him by the waye, and he had a new cloke vpon him, and they two were alone in the felde. And Ahia toke holde of the new cloke  $\dot{y}$  he had on, and rente the same in to twolue peces, and sayde vnto Ieroboam: Take thou ten peces vnto the.

For thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: Beholde, euen thus wyll I rente the kyngdome from the hande of Salomō, and wyll geue the ten trybes. One trybe shall he haue for my seruaunt Dauids sake, and because of the cyte of Ierusalem, t which I haue chosen out of all the trybes of Israel: for they haue forsaken me, and worshipped Astaroth the god of the Sidonians, Chamos the god of the Moabites, and Malcō the god of the children of Ammon, and haue not walked in my wayes, to fulfill my pleasure, myne ordinaunces, and lawes, as dyd Dauid his father.

Notwithstondynge I wyll not take the whole kyngdome from out of his hande, but wil make him a prynce as longe as he lyueth for my seruaunt Dauids sake, whom I dyd chose, which kepte my commaundementes a ordinaunces. * From out of the hande of his sonne wyl I take the kyngdome, and wyl geue ten trybes vnto the, and one vnto his sonne,† that Dauid my seruaunt maye allwaye haue a lanterne before me in the cite of Ierusalem, which I have chosen, that I maye set my name there. Therfore wyl I take the now, to raygue ouer all that thine hert desyreth, and thou shalt be kynge ouer Israel. Yf thou Ø folowe now all that I shall commaunde the, and walke in my wayes, and fulfill my pleasure to kepe myne ordinaunces and commaundementes, as dyd my seruaūt Dauid, then wyll I be with the, and buylde the a sure house, as I buylded vnto Dauid, and wyl geue Israel vnto the and therwith wyll I subdue the sede of Dauid, but not for euermore. But Salomon soughte to kyll Jeroboam. Then leroboam gat him vp, and fled in to Egipte to Sisak the kynge of Egipte, and remayned in Egipte, tyll Salomon dyed.

What more there is to saye of Salomon, and all that he dyd, and his wyszdome, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of Salomon. The tyme that Salomon was kynge at Ierusalem ouer all Israel, is fortye yeare. And Salomon fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buryed in the cite of Dauid his father, and Roboam his sonne was kynge in his steade.

The rij. Chapter.

A ND Roboam wēte vnto Sichem, for all Israel "was come to Sichem him kynge. And whan Ieroboam § sonne of Nebat herde that, while he was yet in Egipte (* whither he was fled for Salomon) he came ugayne out of Egipte. And they sent for him, and called him. And Ieroboam with all the congregacion of Israel came and spake to Roboam, and sayde: Thy father made oure yock to harde: therfore make thou now the harde bondage and the sore yock lighter, and we wyll submytte oure selues vnto the. He sayde vnto them: Go youre waye vnto the thirde daye, and then come to me agayne. And the people wete their waye.

And Roboam the kynge helde a councell with the Elders that stode before Salomo his father whyle he lyued, t he sayde : What is youre councell, that we maye geue this people an answere? They sayde vnto him: Yf thou do this people a pleasure to daye, and folowe their mynde, and heare them, and geue them good wordes, then shal they be obedient vnto the as longe as thou liuest. Neuertheles he forsoke the councell that y Elders had geuen him, and axed councell at the yonge men which were growne vp with him, and stode before him.

And he sayde vnto them: What is youre 13 councell that we may answere this people which haue sayde vnto me: Make the yock lighter, that thy father hath layed vpo vs. And the yonge men that were growne vp with him, sayde vnto him: Where as the people haue sayde vnto the: Thy father hath made oure yock to sore, make thou it easyer for vs, Thus shalt thou saye vnto them: My litle fynger shall be thicker then my fathers loynes. Now, my father layed a sore yock vpon you, but I wyl yet laye more theron: My father correcte you with scourges, but I wyl nourtoure you with scorpions.

So vpon the thyrde daye came Ieroboam with all the people vnto Roboam, as $ kynge had appoynted and saide, come to me agayne on the thyrde daye. And the kynge gaue the people an harde rough answere, and forsoke the coucell that the Elders had geuen him, and talked with them after the councell of the yonge men, and sayde: My father made youre yock sore, but I wyll make it yet sorer vpon you. My father correcte you with scourges, but I wil nourtoure you with scorpios. Thus the kynge folowed not the peoples mynde, for he was turned so fro the LORDE, that he mighte stablish his worde § which he spake by Ahias of Silo vnto leroboam the sonne of Nebat.

But whan all Israel sawe that the kynge of wolde not heare them, the people gaue § kynge an answere and sayde : || What porcion haue we then in Dauid or inberitaunce in the sonne of Isai? Get the to thy tentes O Israel. Loke thou now to thy house thou Dauid. So Israel wente vnto their tentes. As for Roboam, he raigned but ouer y children of Israel, which dwelt in the cities of Iuda. And whan kynge Roboam sent thither Adoram the t 3 Re. 11. g. § 3 Re. 11. e. | 2 Re. 20. a. rentgatherer, all Israel stoned him to death. But kynge Roboam strengthed himselfe, and gat him vp in to a charet, to fle vnto Ierusalem. Thus departed Israel from the house of Dauid vnto this daye. Now whan all Israel herde, that Ieroboam was come againe, they sent for to call him to the whole congregacion, and made him kynge the whole congregation, and made nim kynge ouer all Israel. And no man folowed the house of Dauid, saue onely the tribe of Iuda. * And whan Roboam came to Ierusalem, all the house of Iuda and the trybe of Ben Iamin (euen an hundreth and foure score thousande chosen men of armes) gathered themselues together to fight against § house of Israel, g to brynge the kyngdome agayne vnto Roboam § sonne of Salomō.

But the worde of God came to Semeia the 玬 man of God, and sayde: Speake thou to Roboam the sonne of Salomon kynge of Iuda, and to all y house of Iuda and Ben Iamin, and to the other people, and saye: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shall not go vp and fighte agaynst youre brethren the children of Israel. Let euery man go home agayne, for this is my dede. And they herkened vnto the worde of the LORDE, and turned back, to go their waye, as the LORDE sayde. But Roboam buylded Sichem vpon mount Ephraim, and dwelt therin, and departed thence, and buylded + Penuel.

Ieroboā thoughte in his hert: The kingdome shall fall agayne now vnto the house of Dauid, yf this people go vp to offre in the LORDES house at Ierusalem, and so shall the hert of this people turne to their lorde Roboam kynge of Iuda, and thē shal they slaye me, and fall agayne to Roboam kynge of Iuda. ## The riij. Chapter.

ND beholde, there came a ma of God A from Iuda (thorow the worde of the ÎORDE) vnto Bethel, and Ieroboam stode by the altar to burne incense. And he cried agaynst the altare thorow the worde of the LORDE, and sayde: O altar, altar, thus sayeth the LORDE: Beholde, there shal be borne vnto y house of Dauid a sonne, Iosias by name ¶ which on the shal offer the prestes of the hye places, that burne incense vpon the, and mens bones shal he burne on the. And he gaue a wonder token the same daye, and sayde: This is the token, that the LORDE hath spoken it, beholde, the altar shall ryue, and the aszshes, that are theron, shall be poured out.

But whan the kynge herde the worde of the man of God, that cried agaynst the altare at Bethel, he stretched out his hande by  $\hat{y}$  altare, and sayde: Laye hondes on him. And his hande that he stretched out, wythered, and he coulde not drawe it vnto him agayne. And  $\hat{y}$  altare roue, and the aszshes were poured out from the altare, acordinge to the wonder token that the man of God had geuen by the worde of the LORDE.

And the kynge answered, and sayde vnto the man of God: **O praye the face of the LORDE thy God, and make intercession for me, that my hande maie be restored vnto me agayne. Then prayed the man of God vnto the face of the LORDE. And the kynges hande was restored him agayne, and became as it was afore. And the kynge sayde vnto the man of God: Come home with me, and dyne, and I wil geue the a rewarde.

£ And he departed another waye, and returned not agayne the waye that he came to Bethel. But at Bethel there dwelt an olde prophet vnto who his sonnes came, a tolde him all the workes y the ma of God had done that days at Bethel, g the wordes that he had spoken vnto the kynge. And their father sayde voto them: Which waye is he gone? And his sonnes shewed him the waye that the man of God was gone: which came from Iuda. He sayde vnto his sonnes: Saddell me the asse. And wha they had sadled him the asse, he rode theron, and wente after the man of God, and founde him syttinge vnder an Oke tre, and sayde vnto him: Art thou the man of God that came from Iuda? He sayde: Yee.

Ð He sayde vnto him: Come home with me, and eate bred. He sayde: I maye not turne backe with the, and come with the. Nether wyll I eate bred, ner drynke water with the in this place: for it is spoken vnto me by the worde of the LORDE: Thou shalt nether eate bred there, ner yet drynke water, nether shalt thou go agayne by the waye which thou wentest. He sayde vnto him: I myselfe am a prophet as well as thou, and an angell hath spoken with me by y worde of the LORDE, and saide: Bringe him againe with the, that he maye eate bred, and drynke water. But he lyed vnto him, and broughte him agavne, so that he ate bred, and dranke water in his house.

And whan they sat at the table, the worde of the LORDE came to the prophet that had broughte him agayne, and cryed vnto the man which was come frō Iuda, and sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Because thou hast bene dishobedient vnto the mouth of $ LORDE, and hast not kepte the commaundement that the LORDE thy God commaunded the, but hast turned backe, and hast eaten bred, and dronke water in $ place, wherof he saide vnto the. Then toke the prophet the deed coarse of the man of God, and layed it vpo the asse, and broughte it agayne in to the cite of the olde prophet, to mourne, and to burye him.

And he layed the coarse in his awne graue, Band they mourned for him: Alas my brother. And whan they had buryed him, he saide vnto his sonnes: Whan I dye, burye me in the graue where the mā of God is buried, and laye my bones besyde his bones. + For it shal come to passe, that he cried (thorow the worde of the LORDE) against Bethel, and agaynst all  $\clubsuit$  houses of the hye places, which are in the cities of Samaria.

N the eightenth yeare of kynge Ieroboā the soune of Nebat, "was Abia kynge in £1 Iuda, and reigned thre yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was ' Maecha, the doughter of Abisalom, and he walked in all the synnes of his father, which he had done before him, and his hert was not perfecte with the LORDE his God, as was the hert of Dauid his father. + For because of Dauids sake dyd the LORDE his God geue him a lanterne at Ierusalem, so y he raysed his sonne after him, a manteyned him at Ierusalem, because Dauid dyd the thinge y was righte in y sighte of the LORDE, and departed not from all that he commaunded him as longe as he lyued (sauynge in the matter with § Vrias § Hethite). But there was warre betwene Roboam and Ieroboam, as longe as he lyued.

What more there is to saye of Abia, and all that he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. There was warre also betwene Abia and Ieroboam. And Abia slepte with his fathers, and they buried him in the cite of Dauid. And Asa his sonne B was kynge in his steade. II In § twentyeth yeare of kynge Ieroboam ouer Israel, was Asa kynge in Iuda, and reigned one g fortye yeare at lerusalem. His graundmothers name was Maecha the doughter of Abisalom. And Asa lyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, as dyd his father Dauid. And he remound y whoremongers out of the londe, and put downe all the Idols that his fathers had made. **He put his mother from the mynistracion, that she had made vnto Miplezeth in y groue. And Asa roted out hir Miplezeth, and brent it in the broke Cedron: but the hye places put he not downe. Yet was the hert of Asa perfecte with the LORDE as longe as he lyued. And the syluer and golde, and vessels that his father had halowed, t soch as was sanctified vnto y house of the LORDE, that broughte he in. And there was warre betwene Asa g Baesa the kynge of Israel, as longe as they lyued.

Baesa the kynge of Israel wente vp agaynst C Iuda, and buylded Rama, 'that no man shulde go out and in of Asas syde the kynge of Iuda. Then toke Asa all the syluer and golde that was lefte in the treasure of the house of the LORDE, and in the treasure of the kynges house, and delyuered it in to his seruauntes handes, a sent it vnto "Benadab the sonne of Tabrimon the sonne of Hesion kynge of Siria, which dwelt at Damascon, and let save vnto him: There is a couenaunt betwene me and the, and betwene my father and thy father: therfore sende I the a present of syluer and golde, that thou shuldest breake the couenaunt which thou hast with Baesa the kynge of Israel, that he maye departe fro me.

Benadab agreed vnto kynge Asa, and sent his captaynes agaynst the cities of Israel, and smote Iion and Dan, a Abel Beth Maecha, and all Cineroth with the whole londe of Nephtali. Whā Baesa herde that, he left of from buyldinge Rama, and wente agayne vnto Thirza.

Kynge Asa caused it be proclamed in all D Iuda: Here be no man excepte. And they toke awaye the stones and tymber from Rama, wherwith Baesa had buylded. And kynge Asa buylded Geba Ben Iamin a Mispa therwith.

And the worde of the LORDE came vnto him, and sayde: Get the hence, and turne the towarde the east, and hyde the by the ryuer Crith, which is ouer agaynst Iordane, and thou shalt drynke of the ryuer: and I haue commaunded the rauens, that they shal fede the there. He departed, and dyd acordinge to the worde of the LORDE, and wente his waye, and sat him downe by the ryuer Crith, which is ouer agaynst Iordane. And the rauēs broughte him bred and flesh in the mornynge and in the euenynge, and he dranke of the ryuer.

And it fortuned after certayne dayes, that the river was dryed vp: for there was no rayne in the lode. Then came  $\mathring{y}$  worde of  $\mathring{y}$ LORDE vnto him, and sayde: \$Get  $\mathring{y}$  vp, and go vnto Sarepta, which lieth by Sido: for there haue I commaunded a wedowe to make prouysion for the.

And he gat him vp, and wente vnto Sarepta. And whan he came to the gate of  $\mathring{y}$ cite, beholde, the wedowe was there, and gathered stickes. And he called her, and sayde: Fetch me a litle water in a vessell,  $\mathring{y}$ I maye drinke. And as she was goinge to fetch it, he eried vnto her,  $\mathfrak{g}$  sayde: Brynge me a morsell of bred also in thine hande. She sayde: As truly as the LORDE thy God lyueth, I haue no bred, but an handfull of floure in a pitcher,  $\mathfrak{g}$  a curtesy oyle in a cruse: and beholde, I haue gathered vp one or two stickes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  wyll go and prepare it for me and my sonne, that we maye eate and dye.

Elias sayde vnto her: Feare not, go thy waye,  $\mathfrak{g}$  do as thou hast sayde: yet make me first a morsell of bred therof,  $\mathfrak{g}$  brynge it me forth:  $\mathfrak{g}$  afterwarde shalt thou make it for  $\mathfrak{F}$  $\mathfrak{g}$  thy sonne. For thus saycth  $\mathfrak{F}$  LORDE God of Israel: The meell in the pitcher shall not be spent,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the oyle in  $\mathfrak{F}$  cruse shall not fayll, vnto the daye  $\mathfrak{F}$  the LORDE shal cause it for to rayne vp $\mathfrak{o}$  earth. And Elias toke the childe, and broughte him downe from the chamber in to the house and delyuered him vnto his mother, and sayde: Beholde, thy sonne lyueth. thirde yeare, a sayde : + Go thy waye, a shewe thy selfe vnto Achab, y I maye cause it for to rayne vpon earth. And Elias wente to shewe him selfe vnto Achab. But there was a greate derth i Samaria. And Achab called Abdia his chefe officer: (As for Abdia, he feared v LORDE greatly: for wha Iesabel roted out y prophetes of V LORDE, Abdia toke an C. prophetes, and hyd them in caues, here fiftye, a there fiftye, a prouyded for them with bred and water.) Achab now sayde vnto Abdia: Go thorow the londe vnto all the welles of water a ryuers, yf happlye we maye finde hay, to saue y horses g mules, y all the catell perishe not. And they parted the selues in to the londe, to go thorow it. Achab departed the one waye alone, and Abdia y other waye alone.

Now whan Abdia was on y waye, Elias met him. And whan he knewe him, he fell downe vpon his face, g sayde: Art not thou my lorde Elias? He sayde : yee, go thy waye, and tell thy lorde : heholde. Elias is here. But he sayde : What haue I offended, that thou wilt delyuer thy seruaunt in to the handes of Achab, that he maye slaye me? As truly as the LORDE thy God lyueth, there is no people ner kingdome, but my lorde hath sent thither to seke the. And whan they sayde: 33 He is not here, he toke an ooth of the same kyngdome and nacion, that they had not founde the. And now thou sayest: Go tell thy lorde: beholde, Elias is here. Now whan I were gone from the, the sprete of the LORDE shulde take y awaye, I cannot tell whither: and yf I then came and tolde Achab, and founde the not, he shulde slave me: But thy seruaunt feareth the LORDE from his youth vp. Hath it not bene tolde my lorde what I dyd, whan Iesabel slewe the prophetes of the LORDE, how that I hyd an hundreth of the LORDES prophetes, here fiftye, and there fiftye in the caues, and prouyded for them with bred and water? And thou sayest now: Go thy wave, tell thy lorde: Elias is here, that he maye slave me. Elias saide: As truly as y LORDE Zebaoth lyueth, before whom I stode, I wil shewe my selfe vnto him this daye. Then wete Abdia to mete Achab, a tolde him. And Achab wete for to mete Elias.

And whan Achab sawe Elias, Achab sayde vnto him: Art thou he that troublest Israel? He sayde : I trouble not Israel, ‡but it is thou and thy fathers house, because ye haue forsaken the commaundementes of the LORDE, and walke after Baal. Then stepte Elias vnto all the people, g sayde: How longe halte ye on both y sydes? Yf the LORDE be God, the walke after him : but yf Baal be he, the folowe him. And the people gaue him no answere. And Elias sayde vnto Baals prophetes: Chose ye one bullock, and do ye it first (for ye are many) and call ye vpon the name of youre god,  $\mathfrak{g}$  laye no fyre theron.

And they toke the bullock which he gaue Ð them, a prepared it, a called vpon the name of Bani from the mornynge vntyll the noone daye, and sayde: O Baal heare vs. But there was nether voyce ner answere. And they hopped aboute the altare, as their vse was to do. Now whan it was noone daye, Elias mocked them, and sayde: Crye loude. For he is a god, peraducture he is musynge, or hath somwhat to do, or is gone some journeve, or happlye he slepeth, so that he wolde be waked vp. And they cried loude, and prouoked the selues with knyues g botkens, (as their maner was) tyll \$ bloude folowed. And he sayde: Do it yet once. And they dyd it once agayne. And he sayde : Do it y thirde tyme. And they dyd It the thirde tyme. And  $\hat{y}$  water ranne aboute the altare, and y pytt was full of water also.

And whan the tyme was to offer  $\hat{y}$  meatofferynge, Elias stepte forth, and sayde: O LORDE God of Abraham, of Isaac and of Israel, let it be knowne this daye, that thou art God in Israel, and I thy seruaunt, and that I haue done all this acordinge vnto thy worde. Heare me O LORDE, O heare me,  $\mathbf{\dot{v}}$  this people maye knowe, how that thou art the LORDE God, that thou mayest afterwarde turne their hertes. SThen fell downe the fyre of the LORDE, and consumed the burntofferinge, the wodd, the stones and the earth, and licked vp the water that was in the pytt. Whan all the people sawe that, they fell voon their faces, and sayde : The LORDE is God, y LORDE is God. Elias sayde vnto them : || Laye handes vpon Baals prophetes, y none of them escape. And they toke them. And Elias broughte them downe vnto 🖞 broke Cyson, 🛛 slewe the there.

And Elias sayde vnto Achab: Go vp, eate JF g drynke, for it soundeth as though it wolde rayne sore. And whan Achab wete vp to eate a drinke, Elias asceded vp to the toppe of Carmel, a bowed him selfe downe to the earth, g put his heade betwene his knees, g sayde vnto his lad: Go vp, and loke towarde the See. He wente vp g loked, g sayde: There is nothinge. He sayde: Go agayne seuen tymes. And at the seucth tyme he sayde : Beholde, there goeth vp a litle cloude out of the see, like a mans hande. He sayde : Go vp, and saie vnto Achab: Bynde thy charet, g go downe, y the rayne ouertake the not. And or a ma coulde turne him, the heauen was blacke with cloudes a wynde, a there came a greate rayne. But Achab rode his waie, g departed vnto Iesrael. cosente ner agree vnto him. And he spake vnto Benadabs messaūgers, Saye vnto my lorde & kynge: All & thynges wherfore thou dyddest sende vnto me thy seruaunt at y first, wil I do, but this can I not do. And y messaungers wete, and tolde this againe. The sent Benadab vnto him sayege: The goddes do this and y vnto me, yf the dust of Samaria shalbe ynough, for euery one of my people to brynge me an handfull therof. But y kynge of Israel answered, a sayde: Tell him, Let not him y putteth on y harnes, make his boast like him y hath put it of. Wha Benadab herde y (euë as he was drynkinge with the kynges in  $\psi$  pauylion) he sayde vnto his seruautes: Set youre selues in araye. And they set the selues in araie against y cite.

And beholde, there came a prophet vnto Achab & kynge of Israel, g saide: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Hast thou sene all this greate multitude? Beholde, this daie wil I delyuer the in to thy hande, so y thou shalt knowe, how y I am y LORDE. Achab sayde: By whom? He sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Euch by the yonge men of the rulers of the londe. He sayde: Who shal order the battayl? He sayde: Thou. Then mustered he the yonge men of the rulers of the londe,  $\alpha$ there were two hudreth and two and thirtie of them: g after the mustured he of the whole people of all the childre of Israel, seue thousande men, and they wente out in the noone daye. As for Benadab, he dranke and was dronken in the pauylion with the two g thirtie kynges which were come to helpe him. And the yonge men of the rulers of the londe wente forth first.

Benadab sent forth,  $\mathfrak{q}$  they brought him worde,  $\mathfrak{q}$  sayde: There come men out of Samaria. He sayde: Take them alyue, whether they be come forth for peace, or for warre. But whan the londe rulers yonge men were gone forth, and the hoost behynde them, every one smote him  $\mathfrak{F}$  came in his waye. And the Sirians fled, and Israel folowed after them. And Benadab the kynge of Syria escaped with horses and horsme. And the kyonge of Israel wente forth, and smote horses and charettes, and dyd a greate slaughter on the Syrians.

D Then came there a prophet vnto the kynge of Israel, and sayde vnto him: Go thy waye and strength the, and take hede, and loke well what thou doest: for whan the yeare is aboute, the kynge of Syria shall come agaynst the of the new. For the kynge of y Syrians seruauntes sayde vnto him: Their goddes are goddes of the mountaynes, therfore haue they gotten the victory.

But let vs fyghte with them on the playne, and thou shalt se that we shal ouercome them. Do thus, put awaye the kynges euery one from his place, and set dukes in their steades, and appoynte the an hoost as was that which thou hast lost,  $\alpha$  horses  $\alpha$  charettes as the other were, and let vs fight agaynst the in the plaine, and thou shalt se that we shal haue the victory. He cosented vnto their voyce, and dyd so.

Now whan the yeare was gone aboute, Benadab appoynted the Sirians, and wente vp towarde Aphek, to fighte agaynst Israel, and the childrē of Israel mustured, and prouyded them selues with vytailes, and wēte to mete them, and pitched their tētes ouer against them, like two litle flockes of goates but the londe was full of the Syrians.

And there came a man of God, and sayde E vnto the kynge of Israel: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Because the Syrians have sayde, that the LORDE is a God of the moutaynes and not a God of the valleys, therfore haue I geuen all this greate heape in to thy handes. that ye maye knowe how that I am y LORDE. And they pitched their tentes right ouer agaynst them seuen dayes. But vpon ŷ seuenth daye they wente together in to the battayll: and the children of Israel smote of the Sirians an hundreth thousande fote men in one daye, and the remnaunt fled to Aphek in to the cite, and the wall fell vpon the other And seuen and twenty thousande men. Benadab fled also vnto the cite in to a litle chamber.

Then sayde his seruauntes vnto him: Beholde, we have herde that the kynges of the house of Israel are mercifull kinges, Let vs therfore put sack cloth aboute oure loynes, and halters aboute oure neckes,  $\alpha$  go forth to the kynge of Israel, peraduenture he shal let thy soule lyue.

And they put sack cloth aboute their loynes, and halters aboute their neckes, and came to the kynge of Israel, and sayde: Benadab thy seruaunt sayeth vnto the: O let my soule lyue. He sayde: yf he be yet alyue, he is Micheas sayde: As truly as the LORDE C liueth, loke what the LORDE sayeth vnto me, ý wyl I speake. And whan he came to the kynge, the kynge sayde vnto him: Micheas, shal we go vnto Ramoth in Gilead to fight or shall we let it alone? He sayde vnto him : Yee, go vp, thou shalt prospere righte well, the LORDE shall geue it in to the kynges hande. But the kynge sayde vnto him agayne: I charge ŷ that thou saye no other thinge vnto me but the trueth, in the name of § LORDE. He sayde: I sawe all Israel scatted abrode vpon the mountaynes, as the shepe that haue And the LORDE saide: no shepherde. Haue these no lorde? Let every one turne home agayne in peace. Then sayde y kinge of Israel vnto Iosaphat: Tolde not I & that he wolde prophecye me no good, but euell?

He sayde: Heare now therfore the worde of the LORDE: * I sawe the LORDE syt vpon his seate, and all the hoost of heauen stödinge by him at his righte hande g at his And the LORDE saide: Who wil lefte. disceaue Achab to go vp, g fall at Ramoth in Gilead. And one sayde this, another that. Then wete there forth a sprete, a stode before the LORDE, and sayde: I wyl disceaue him. The LORDE sayde vnto him: Wherwith? He sayde vnto him : I wyll go forth, and be a false sprete in the mouth of all his prophetes. He saide: Thou shalt discease him, and shalt be able : go forth and do so. Beholde now, the LORDE hath geue a false sprete in § mouth of all these thy prophetes, and the LORDE hath spoken euell ouer the. Then stepte forth Sedechias the sonne of Cnaena, and smote Micheas vpon the cheke, and sayde: What, is the sprete of the LORDE departed tro me, to speake with the? Micheas sayde: Beholde, thou shalt se it in y daye, whan thou shalt go fro one chamber to another to hyde the.

The kynge of Israel sayde : Take Micheas, and let him remayne with Amon the ruler of the cite, and with Ioas the kynges sonne, and 12 | saye: Thus sayeth the kynge: Put this man in preson, and fede him with bred and water

So the kynge of Israel and Iosaphat V kynge of Iuda wente vp vnto Ramoth in Gilead. And the kynge of Israel sayde vnto Iosaphat: Chaunge thy clothes, and come in The kinge of to  $\psi$  battayll in thine araie. Israel chaunged his clothes also, and wete in to the battayll. But the kynge of Siria commaunded the rulers of his charettes (of whom there were two and thirtie) and saide: Ye shal fight nether agaynst small ner greate, but onely agaynst the kynge of Israel. And whan the rulers of the charettes sawe Iosaphat, they thought it had bene the kynge of Israel, and fell vpon him with fightinge. But Iosaphat cried. So whan the rulers of the charettes sawe that it was not y kinge of Israel, they turned back frö him.

A certayne man bended his bowe harde, and shott the kynge of Israel betwene the mawe and \$ longes. And he sayde vnto his charetman: Turne thine hade, and cary me out of the hoost, for I am wounded. And  $v_1$ battayll was sore the same daie. And the kinge stode vpō his charet, agaynst the Syriās and dyed in the eveninge, and the bloude ranne from the wounde in to the myddes of And whan the Sonne wente the charet. downe there was a proclamacion made in the hoost, and sayde : Euery one gett him in to his cite, and to his countre. Thus the kynge dyed, and was broughte vnto Samaria, and they buryed him in Samaria. A HASIA the sonne off Achab was kynge ouer Israel at Samaria in  $\mathring{y}$  sevententh yeare of Iosaphat kīge of Iuda,  $\mathfrak{g}$  reigned ouer Israel two yeares,  $\mathfrak{g}$  dyd  $\mathring{y}$  which was euell in  $\mathring{y}$  sight of the LORDE, and walked in the waye of his father and of his mother,  $\mathfrak{g}$  in the waie of Ieroboam  $\mathring{y}$  soune of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne. And serued Baal, and worshipped him, and displeased the LORDE God of Israel, euē as his father dyd. The Moabites also fell awaye from Israel, whan Achab was deed.

And Ochosias fell thorow y grate in his chāber at Samaria, and was deed sicke, and sent messaungers, and sayde vnto them: Go youre waye, and axe councell at Beelzebub the god of Ekron, whether I shall recouer from this sicknesse. But the angell of  $\hat{y}$ LORDE sayde vnto Elias the Theszbite: Vp,  $\alpha$  go mete the messaungers of the kynge of Samaria, and saie vnto them: Is there no God in Israel, that ye go to axe councell at  $\hat{y}$ god of Ekron? Therfore thus sayeth the LORDE: Thou shalt not come from the bed wheron thou lyest, but shalt dye the death.

And Elias wente his waye. And whā ŷ messaungers came to Ochosias agayne, he sayde vnto thē: Why come ye agayne? They sayde vnto him: There came vp a man in oure waye, and sayde vnto vs: Go againe to the kinge that hath sent you, and saye vnto him: Thus saieth the LORDE: Is there no God in Israel, ŷ thou sendest to axe coūcel at Beelzebub ŷ god of Ekrō? And he toke holde of his clothes, and rente them in two peces, and toke vp Elias cloke that was fallen from him, and turned backe, and stode by the shore of Iordane, and toke the same cloke of Elias which was fallen from him, and smote it in the water, and saide: Where is now the LORDE God of Elias? And he smote it in to the water, and then parted it asunder on both the sydes, and Eliseus wente thorow.

And whan the prophetes children which 玬 were at Iericho ouer agaynst him, sawe him, they sayde: The sprete of Elias resteth vpo Eliseus, and so they wete forth to mete him, and worshipped him to the groude, and savde vnto him : Beholde, there are fiftye valeaunt mē amonge thy seruauntes, let them go and seke thy lorde, peraduenture the sprete of the LORDE hath taken him, and cast him vpon some mountaine or in some valley. But he saide: Sende them not. Neuertheles they constrayned him, tyll he was ashamed, and sayde: Let them go. And they sent fiftye men, which soughte him thre dayes: but they founde him not, and came agayne vnto him. And he abode at Iericho, and sayde vnto them: Tolde not I you, that ye shulde not go? And the men of the cite sayde vnto Eliseus : Beholde, there is good dwellynge in this cite, as my lorde seyth, but the water is euell, and the londe vnfrutefull.

He sayde: Bringe me hither a new vessell, g put salt in it. And they broughte it him. Then wete he forth vnto the well of water, and cast the salt therin, g sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I haue healed this water: from hence forth shal there no deed ner vnfrutefulnes come of it. So the water was healed vnto this daye, acordinge to the worde of Eliseus which he spake.

And he wete vp towarde Bethel. And as he was goynge vp by the waye, there came litle boyes out of the cite, and mocked him, g sayde: Come vp here thou balde heade, come vp here thou balde heade. And he turned him aboute. And whā he sawe them, he cursed them in the name of the LORDE. Then came there two Beeres out of the wod, and rente two and fortye of the children. From thence wete he vp vnto mount Carmel, and from it turned he backe to Samaria.

The iij. Chapter.

I ORAM the sonne of Achab was kynge ouer Israel at Samaria in  $\mathring{y}$  eightenth yeare of Iosaphat kynge of Iuda,  $\mathfrak{g}$  raigned xij. yeares,  $\mathfrak{g}$  dyd  $\mathring{y}$  which was euell in  $\mathring{y}$ sighte of  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE, but not as his father  $\mathfrak{g}$ his mother: for he put awaye  $\mathring{y}$  pilers of Baal, which his father caused to make. Neuertheles he cleued vnto  $\mathring{y}$  synnes of Ieroboā  $\mathring{y}$  sonne of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne,  $\mathfrak{g}$ departed not there frõ.

Mesa v kynge of the Moabites had many shepe, g payed tribute vnto the kynge of Israel with the woll of an hundreth thousande lābes, π of an hūdreth thousande rāmes. *But whan Achab was deed, the kynge of y Moabites fell awaye frō the kynge of Israel. At 🕏 same tyme wēte kynge Ioram frō Samaria, ī mustered all Israel, g sent vnto Iosaphat kynge of Iuda, sayenge: The kynge of the Moabites is fallen awaye fro me, come thou with me to fighte agaynst y Moabites. He sayde : I wil come vp, †I am euen as thou, and my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses. And sayde morouer: Which waye wil we go vp? He sayde: by the waye in the wyldernesse of Edom.

So the kynge of Israel, the kynge of Iuda, 33 g the kynge of Edom wente forth. And whan they had gone aboute seuē dayes iourney, y hoost a the catell y were amonge the had no water. Then sayde the kynge of Israel: Alas, the LORDE hath called these thre kynges, to delyuer the in to the hande of the Moabites. But Iosaphat sayde: Is here no prophet of  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE,  $\mathring{y}$  we maye axe coucell at  $\mathring{y}$  LORDE by him? Then answered one of y kynge of Israels seruauntes, a saide: Here is Eliseus y sonne of Saphat, which poured water vpon Elias handes. Iosaphat sayde: The worde of y LORDE is with him. So the kynge of Israel a Iosaphat, and v kynge of Edom wente downe vnto him.

But Eliseus sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: CWhat hast thou to do with me? go to the prophetes of thy father c to thy mothers prophetes. The kinge of Israel saide vnto him: No, for m LORDE hath called these thre kynges, to delyuer them in to the handes of the Moabites. Eliseus sayde: As truly as the LORDE Zebaoth lyueth, before whom Istöde, yf I regarded not Iosaphat the kynge of Iuda, I wolde not regarde the, ner set oughte by ŷ. So bringe me now a mynstrell. And whan the mynstrell played vpō the instrument, the hande of the LORDE came vpō him. And he sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: Make pittes by this broke. For thus sayeth the LORDE: Ye shal se nether wynde ner rayne, yet shall the broke be full of water, that ye and youre housholdes q youre catell maie drynke. Yee and that is but a small thinge in the sighte of the LORDE. And the Moabites shal he delyuer in to youre handes, so y ye shal smyte all the stronge cities, and all y chosen cities * g shal fell downe all the good trees, and stoppe all the welles of water and all the good feldes shall ye make waist with stones.

On the morow, whan the meatofferynge is offered, beholde, there came water y waye from Edom, and fylled § londe with water. But when the Moabites herde,  $\dot{v}$  the kynges came vp to fighte agaynst the, they called all ý harnessed men, a their rulers, a stode on ý border. And whan they rose early in § mornynge, a the Sonne wête vp vpon y-water, the Moabites thoughte the water ouer agaynst the to be eue as reed as bloude, g they sayde: It is bloude, 🖞 kynges haue destroyed them selues with the swerde, g one hath smytten another. Now Moab get the vp to the spoyles. But whan they came to the tentes of Israel, the Israelites gat vp, g smote the Moabites, g they fled before them.

Neuertheles they came in, g smote Moab, g brake downe the cities, g euery one cast his stone vpon all the good feldes, and made them full, and stopped all ŷ welles of water, and felled downe all the good trees, tyll there remayned but the stones in the brickwall, and they compased them aboute with slynges, and smote them.

But whā the kynge of  $\mathbf{\hat{y}}$  Moabites sawe  $\mathbf{\hat{y}}$ the battayll was to strõge for him, he toke to him seuen C. men, which drue  $\mathbf{\hat{y}}$  swerde, to fall vpon the kynge of Edom: neuertheles they were not able. Then toke he his first sonne, which shulde haue bene kynge in his steade, and offred him for a burntofferynge vpon the wall. Then came there a greate wrath ouer Israel, that they departed from him, and turned agayne in to their londe.

The bi. Chapter.

A THE children of y prophetes sayde vnto Eliseus: Beholde, the place where we Eliseus: Beholde, the place where we dwell before ŷ, is to narow for vs, let vs go vnto Iordane, a euery one fetch tymbre there, v we may ethere buylde vs a place to dwell in. He saide: Go youre waye. And one sayde: Go to then, g come with thy seruauntes. He sayde: I wil go with you. And he wete with them. And whan they came to Iordane, they hewed downe tymber. And as one was fellynge downe a tre, the yron fell in to the water, and he cried and sayde: Alas my lorde, a it is burowed. But the man of God sayde: Where fell it in? And whan he had shewed him the place, he cut downe a sticke, and thrust it in there. Then swame the yron. And he sayde: Take it vp. So he put forth his hande, and toke it.

33 And the kynge of Syria warred agaynst Israel, and toke councell at his seruauntes, and sayde: There q there will we lye. But the man of God sent to ŷ kynge of Israel, sayenge: Bewarre ŷ thou go not vnto that place, for the Syrians rest there. So the kynge of Israel sent vnto ŷ place wherof ŷ man of God tolde him, g kepte it, g helde watch there, g dyd that not once or twyse onely.

I The was y kynge of Syrias herte vexed therfore, and called his seruauntes, and sayde vnto them: Wyll ye not tell me, which of oure men is fled vnto the kynge of Israel? Then sayde one of his seruauntes: Not so my lorde O kynge, but Eliseus the prophet in Israel telleth the kynge of Israel all that thou speakest in thy chamber where thou lyest. He sayde: Go youre waye thē and loke where he is, that I maye sende, and cause him be fetched. And they shewed him and sayde: Beholde, he is at Dothan. Thē sent he thither horses g charetes, g a greate power. And whā they came thither by nighte, they compased the cite aboute. And the mynister of the mā of God arose early to get him vp. And as he wēte forth, beholde, there laye an hoost of men aboute § cite with horses and charettes.

Then saide his childe vnto him: Alas syr, m how wyll we now do? He sayde: + Feare not, for there are mo of them y are with vs, then of those that are with them. And Eliseus prayed a sayde: LORDE open his eyes, y he maye se. Then the LORDE opened ŷ childes eyes, ŷ he sawe, c beholde, y mount was full of fyrie horses a charettes roūde aboute Eliseus. And whā they came downe vnto him, Eliseus made his prayer, a sayde: LORDE smyte this people with blyndnes. ‡And he smote the with blyndnes acordinge to the worde of Eliseus. And Eliseus saide vnto them : This is not y waye nor the cite, folowe me, I wil brynge you to the man whom ye seke. And he broughte them vnto Samaria.

And whan they came to Samaria, Eliseus # sayde: LORDE open these mens eyes, y they maye se. And the LORDE opened their eyes, y they sawe, g beholde, they were in the myddes of Samaria. And whan the kynge of Israel sawe them, he saide vnto Eliseus: My father, shal I smyte the? He saide: Thou shalt not smyte the: loke whom thou takest with thy swerde and bowe, smyte those. Set bred and water before them, that they maye eate and drynke, and let them, departe vnto their lorde. The was there a greate dyner prepared. And whan they had eaten and dronken, he let them go to departe vnto their lorde. From that tyme forth came the men of warre of the Syrians nomore in to the londe of Israel.

After this it fortuned, that Benadab the  $\mathcal{J}$ kynge of Syria gathered all his hoost, and wete vp,  $\mathfrak{g}$  layed sege vnto Samaria:  $\mathfrak{g}$  there was a greate derth at Samaria. But they layed sege to the cite so longe, tyll an Asses heade was worth foure score syluer pes, and the fourth parte of a \*Cab of doues donge worth fyue syluer pens. And whan the kynge of Israel wente vnto the wall, a woman cried vnto him and sayde: Helpe me my lorde O kynge. He sayde: Yf the LORDE helpe the not, wherwith shal I helpe the? with y barne or with the wyne presse? And the kynge snyde vnto her: What ayleth ŷ? She sayde : This woman sayde vnto me : Geue vs thy sound, that we may eate him, tomorow wyll we cate my sonne. So we sod my sonne, g haue eaten him, and I sayde vnto her on \$ thirde daye: Geue vs thy sonne and let vs eate him, but she hath hyd him awaye.

Whan the kynge herde the womans wordes, - 6 he rente his clothes, whyle he was goynge to the wall. The sawe all the people, that he had a sack cloth vnder vpon his body. And he sayde: + God do this and that vnto me, yf the heade of Eliseus the sonne of Saphat shal this daye stonde vpon him. As for Eliseus, he sat in his house, a the Elders sat by him. And he sent a man before him, but or euer the messaunger came to him, he sayde vnto v Elders: Haue ye not sene how this childe of murthure hath sent hither, to take awaye my heade? Take hede, whan the messaunger cometh, y ye holde him at the dore. Beholde, y noyse of his lordes fete foloweth him. Whyle he was thus talkynge with them, beholde, y messaunger came to him, g sayde: Beholde, this euell cometh of $ LORDE, and what more shal I loke for of the LORDE?

The bij. Chapter.

2 LISEUS sayde: Heare the worde of the LORDE. Thus sayeth the LORDE: Tomorow aboute this tyme shal a buszshel of fyne meel be solde for one Sycle, and two buszshels of barly for one Sycle vnder the porte of Samaria. Then a knyghte (vpon whose hande the kynge leaned) answered the ma of God, and sayde: And though the LORDE made wyndowes in heaue, how coulde soch a thinge come to passe? He saide: Beholde, thou shalt se it with thine eyes, a shalt not eate therof.

And there were foure leporous men at y dore before the porte, and one sayde vnto another: Why tary we here whyle we dye? Though we thoughte to come in to the cite, yet is there derth in  $\hat{y}$  cite, and there shulde we be fayne to dye. And yf we tary here, we must dye also. Let vs go now, and flye vnto the hoost of the Syrians. Yf they let vs lyue, we shall lyue: yf they slaye vs, then are we deed. And so they gat them vp early, to come vnto the hoost of the Syrians. And whan they came to the vttemost ende of  $\hat{y}$ tentes, beholde, there was no body.

§ For the LORDE had made the Syrians to heare a noyse of horses, charettes, and of a mightie greate hoost, so that they sayde one to another amonge the selues: Beholde, the kynge of Israel hath hyred the kynge of the Hethites, and the kynge of the Egipcians agaynst vs, to come vpo vs. And they gat them vp, and fled early in the twylight, and lefte their bothes, and horses and Asses in the tentes as they stode, g fled euery man where he mighte saue his life.

Now whan the lepers came to the place of  $\mathfrak{C}$  the tentes, they wente in to the tentes, ate and dronke, and toke syluer, golde and rayment, and wente and hyd it:  $\mathfrak{C}$  came agayne  $\mathfrak{C}$  entred in to another tent, and toke therout, and wente and hyd it. But one of them saide vnto another : Let vs not do thus, this daye is a daye of good tidynges. Yf we kepe this secrete and byde tyll the lighte mornynge, oure trespace wyl be founde out. Let vs go now therfore, that we maye come,  $\mathfrak{C}$  tell the kynges house.

And whan they came, they cried at the porte of the cite, and tolde them, and sayde : We came to the tentes of the Sirians, and beholde, there is no mā there, nether yet eny mans voyce, but horses and asses bounde, and the bothes as they stonde. Then cried § porters and tolde it within in § kynges house. And the kynge arose in the nighte, a sayde vnto his seruauntes: I will tell you how $ Syrians deale with vs: they knowe y we suffer honger, and are gone out of the tetes, to hyde them selues in the felde, and thynke thus: whan they go out of the cite, we wyll take them alyue, a come in to the cite. Then answered one of his seruauntes, and sayde: Let vs take the fyue horses that remayne, which yet are lefte in the cite (beholde, these are left therin for all y multitude in

And whan they wente after the vnto Ior-驷 dane, beholde, the waye laye full of garmentes and vessels, which the Syrians had cast from the, whyle they made haist. And whan the messaungers came agayne, and tolde the kynge, the people wente forth, and spoyled the tentes of the Syrians. And a buszshel of fyne meell was solde for a Sycle, and two buszshels of barlye for a Sycle also, \*acord-inge to the worde of the LORDE. But the kynge appoynted the knyghte (vpon whose hande he leened) to be at the gate, a the people trode vpon him, so that he dyed, euen as the man of God sayde, whan the kynge came downe vnto him. And it came to passe euen as y man of God tolde the kynge, whā he sayde: Tomorow aboute this tyme shall two buszshels of barlye be solde for one Sycle, and a buszshel of fyne meel for one Sycle vnder the gate at Samaria. And the knyghte answered the man of God, and sayde: Beholde, though y LORDE made wyndowes in heauen, how coulde soch a thinge come to passe? Neuertheles he sayde: Beholde, with thine eyes shalt thou se it, and shalt not eate therof. And euen so fortuned it vnto him, for the people trode vpon him in the gate,  $\sqrt[4]{v}$ he dyed.

The biij. Chapter.

LISEUS spake vnto the womä, † whose sonne he had restored vnto life againe, and saide : Get the vp, g go with thine housholde, and be a straunger where thou canst: for the LORDE shall call for a derth, which shal come in to the londe seuen yeare loge. The woman gat her vp, and dyd as the man of God sayde,  $\alpha$  wente with hir housholde, and was a straunger in the londe of the Philistynes seuen yeare. But whan the seuen yeares were ended, the woman came agayne out of the Philistynes lode, and wente forth to crye vpon the kynge for hir house and londe. The kynge spake vnto Gehasi the seruaunt of the man of God, g sayde: Tell me all the greate actes that Eliseus hath done. And whyle he was tellynge the kynge how he had made one that was deed, to lyue agayne, beholde, the woman whose sonne he had caused to reuyue, came euen in the meane season, and cried vnto the kynge for hir house and londe. Then sayde Gehasi: My lorde O kynge, this same is the womā, and this is hir sonne, whom Eliseus restored vnto life agayne. And the kynge axed y woman, and she tolde Then the kynge delyuered her a chamhim. berlayne,  $\alpha$  saide: Restore her agayne all that is hirs, and all the increase of the londe, sence the tyme that she lefte the londe vntyll now.

#And Eliseus came to Damascon, a Be-133 nadab the kynge of Syria laye sicke. And it was tolde him, and sayde: The man of God is come hither. Then sayde the kynge vnto Hasael: Take giftes with the, a go mete the man of God, and axe councell at § LORDE by him, and saye: Maye I recouer from this sicknesse? Hasael wente for to mete him, and toke rewardes with him, and of all the goodes at Damasco, as moch as fortye Camels mighte beare. And whan he came, he stode before him, and sayde: Thy sonne Benadab the kynge of Syria hath sent me vnto the, sayenge: Maye I recouer from this sicknes?

Eliseus sayde vnto him : Go thy waye and tell him : Thou shalt recouer. But the LORDE hath shewed me, v he shal dye v death. And the man of God loked earnestly, a made a troublous countenaunce, a wepte. The sayde Hasael: Wherfore wepeth my lorde? He sayde: I knowe what evell thou shalt do vnto the children of Israel. Thou shalt burne their stronge cities with fyre, and slave their yonge men with the swerde, and kyll their yonge children, and ryppe vp their wemen with childe.

Hasael sayde: How so, is thy seruaunt a C dogg, that he shulde do soch a greate thynge? Eliseus saide : § The LORDE hath shewed me, y thou shalt be kynge of Syria. And he wēte his waye from Eliseus, 🛪 came to his lorde, which saide vnto him: What saieth Eliseus vnto the? He sayde : He tolde me, Thou shalt recouer. But on the nexte daye he toke y bed couerynge, and dypte it in water, and spred it ouer him, and he dyed, a Hasael was kynge in his steade.

And the prophetes yonge man, the childe wente his waye vnto Ramoth in Gilead. And whan he came in, beholde, the captaynes of the hoost sat there, and he sayde: I haue somwhat to saye vnto the O captayne. Iehu saide: Vnto whom amonge vs all? He sayde: Euen vnto the o captayne.

Then stode he vp, and wente in. So he 13 poured the oyle vpon his heade, and sayde vnto him : Thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: I haue anoynted y to be kynge ouer the LORDES people of Israel, and thou shalt smyte thy lorde Achabs house, that I maye alonge the bloude of my serulates the prophetes, and the bloude of all the LORDES seruauntes, from the hande of Iesabel, that all the house of Achab maye periszshe. And I wyl rote out from Achab, 'euen him that maketh water agaynst the wall; and the closed vp and the desolate in Israel: and the house of Achab wyll I make euen as the house of Icroboam the sonne of Nebat, and as the house of Baesa the sonne of Ahia, and y dogges shall eate vp Iesabel vpon the felde at Iesrael, and noman shall burye her. And he opened the dore, and fled.

And wha Iehu came forth to his lordes C seruauntes, they saide vnto him: Are all Wherfore came this madd thinges well? felowe vnto the? He saide vnto them: Ye knowe the man well, g what he bath spoken. They sayde : That is not true, but tell thou vs. He sayde: Thus and thus hath he spoken vntome, and sayde: Thus sayeth the LORDE: I have anoynted the to be kynge over Israel. Then made they haist, and every one toke his garment and laied them under him in maner of a judges seate, and blewe the trompet, and sayde: Iehu is made kinge. So Iehu the sonne of Iosaphat the sonne of Nimsi, made a confederacion agaynst Ioram. As for Iorā he laye before Ramoth in Gilead with all Israel agaynst Hasael the kynge of Syria. \*But Ioram the kynge was turned backe,  $\dot{y}$ he might be healed of the woundes wherwith the Syrians had wounded him, whā he foughte with Hasael the kynge of the Syrians.

- And Iehu sayde: Yf it be youre mynde, 囿 there shall noman escape out of the cite, to go and tell it at Iesreel. And he rode, and departed vnto Iesrael: for Ioram laye there, and Ochosias the kinge of Iuda was come downe to vyset Ioram. But the watchman that stode vpon the tower at Iesrael, sawe the company of Iehu commynge, and sayde : I se Then sayde Ioram: Take a a company. charet, and sende to mete the, and saye: Is it peace? And the charetman rode to mete them, and sayde: Thus sayeth the kynge: Is it peace? Iehu sayde: What hast thou to do with peace? Turne the behynde me. The watchman tolde it, and sayde: The messaunger is come vnto them, and cometh not Then sent he another charetman, agayne. which whan he came to them, saide: Thus sayeth the kynge: Is it peace? Iehu sayde: What hast thou to do with peace? Turne § behynde me.
- And the watchman tolde it, and sayde: He is come to them: and commeth not agayne, and the goynge is as it were the goynge of Iehu the sonne of Nimsi : for he dryueth on as he were mad. Then sayde Ioram : Binde the charet fast. And they bounde the charet, and so they wente forth, Ioram the kynge of Israel, and Ochosias the kynge of Iuda, euery one vpon his charet, to mete Iehu. And they founde him vpon the felde of Naboth the Iesraelite. And whan Ioram sawe Iehu, he sayde : Iehu, is it peace? But he sayde : What peace? The whordome and witchcraft of thy mother Iesabel is not yet come to an ende.

Then turned Ioram his hande and fled, and sayde vnto Ochosias: There is treason Ochosias. But Iehu toke his bowe,  $\mathfrak{g}$  shot Ioram betwene the armes, that the arowe wente thorow his hert, and he fell downe in his charet. And Iehu sayde vnto Bidekar the knyghte: Take and cast him in the pece of londe of Naboth the Iesraelite: for I remembre sence thou rodest with me in a charet after Achab his father, that the LORDE wolde laye this heuy burthen vpon him. I holde (sayde the LORDE) I wyl recompence the y bloude of Naboth and of his childrē, euen in this pece of londe. Take him now and cast him in to that pece of londe, †acordynge to the worde of the LORDE.

Whan Ochosias the kinge of Iuda sawe this, he fled by the waie vnto y garden house. But Iehu folowed after him, and commaunded to smyte him also vpon his charet in the goynge vp towarde Gur, which lieth by Ieblaam: and he fled vnto Megiddo, and dyed there. And his seruauntes caused him to be caried vnto Ierusalem, and there they buryed him in his awne graue with his fathers in the cite of Dauid. Ochosias reigned ouer Iuda in v eleuenth yeare of Iorā v sonne of Achab. And whan Iehu came to Iesrael, and Iesabel herde therof, she coloured hir face, and decked hir heade, and loked out at the wyndowe. And whan Iehu came vnder the gate, she sayde: ‡Prospered Symri well that slewe his lorde?

And he lifte vp his face to the wyndow, @ and sayde : Who is with me? Then resorted there two or thre chamberlaynes vnto him. He sayde: Cast her downe headlinges. And they cast her downe headlynges, so that § wall and the horses were sprenkled with hir bloude, and she was trodde vnder fete. And whan he came in, and had eaten and dronken, he sayde: Loke vpon yonder cursed woman, τ burye her, §for she is a kynges doughter. Neuertheles whan they wente in to burye her, they founde nothinge of her, but the szkull and the fete, and the palmes of her handes. And they came agayne and broughte him worde. He saide: This is even it that the LORDE spake by his seruaunt Elias the Theszbite, and sayde : "In the felde of Iesrael shal the dogges eate Iesabels flesh. cities, g ordynaunce, loke which is the best and most righteous amonge youre lordes sonnes, g set him vpon his fathers seate, and fighte for youre lordes house.

Neuertheles they were sore afrayed, and sayde: Beholde, two kynges were not able to stonde before him, how wyl we then endure? And they that were ouer the house and ouer the cite, and the Elders and tuters sent vnto Ichu, sayõge: We are thy seruauntes, we wyll do all that thou sayest vnto vs: We wil make no man kynge, do thou what pleaseth the. Then wrote he the seconde letter vnto them with these wordes: Yf ye be myne, and herken vnto my voyce, then take the heades of the men youre lordes sonnes, and brynge me them tomorow by this tyme vnto Iesrael.

The kynges sonnes were thre score men and ten, and ŷ chefe men of the cite broughte thē vp. Now whan this letter came they toke the kynges sonnes, and slewe them euen thre score men and ten, and layed their heades in baszkettes, and sent them to him vnto Iesrael. And whan the messaunger came, g tolde him, and sayde: They haue broughte the heades of the kynges children, he sayde: Laye them vpon two heapes at the dore of the porte tyll tomorow.

And on the morow whan he wente forth, he stode, and sayde vnto all the people: Are ye righteous? Beholde, I haue made an appoyntmët against my lorde, and slayne him, who hath slayne all these then? Vnderstonde ye now therfore, that there is not fallen vpon the earth one worde of the LORDE, which he spake agaynst the house of Achab: and the LORDE hath done, euen * as he sayde by his seruaunt Elias. So Iehu smote all the remnaunt of the house of Achab at Iesrael, all his greate men, his kynsfolkes, and his prestes, tyll there was not one lefte ouer. And he gat hum vp, wente his waye, and came to Samaria. C | By the waye there was a shepherdes house, where lehu founde the brethren of Ochosias kynge of Iuda, and sayde: Whence are ye? They sayde: We are Ochosias brethren, and are goynge downe to salute the kynges children, and the quenes children. He sayde : Take them alyue. And they toke them alyue, and slewe them by the welles syde at the shepherdes house, euen two and fortye men, and

And whan he wente from thence, he foude Ionadab  $\hat{y}$  sonne of + Rechab, which met him, g saluted him. And he sayde vnto him: Is thyne hert righte, as myne hert is with thyne hert? Ionadab sayde: Yee. Yf it be so (sayde he) then geue me thy hande. And he gaue him his hande. And so he caused him to syt besyde him in the charet, and saide: Come with me, and se my zele for the LORDE. And they caryed him with him vpon his charet. And whan he came to Samaria, he smote all that remayned of Achab at Samaria, tyll he had destroyed him, acordynge to the worde of the LORDE,  $\sharp$  which he spake vnto Elias.

And Iehu gathered all the people together, a and saide vnto them: SAchab did Baal but litle seruyce, Iehu wyll serue him better. Call vnto me now therfore all Baals prophetes, all his seruautes and all his prestes, that there be none wantynge, for I haue a greate sacrifyce to do vnto Baal. Who so euer is myssed, shal not lyue. But Iehu dyd it craftely, that he mighte destroye all the mynisters of Baal. And Iehu sayde : Sanctifie y feast vnto Baal, and proclame it. And Iehu sent in to all Israel, and caused all Baals ministers to come, so that there was nomā lefte behynde, which came not. And they came in to Baals house, so that the house of Baal was full from one corner to another.

Then sayde he vnto him that had the rule of the vestrye: Brynge forth rayment for all Baals mynisters. And he broughte forth the rayment. And Iehu wente in to Baals house with Ionadab the sonne of Rechab, and sayde vnto Baals mynisters: Search and se that there be not here amoge you eny mynyster of the LORDE, but onely Baals mynisters.

And whan they came in to offer sacrifyces and burntofferynges, lehu appoynted him foure score men without,  $\alpha$  sayde: Yf eny of these men escape whom I delyuer vnder youre handes, then shal the same mans soule be for his soule. But Iehu lefte not of from the sinnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat (which caused Israel to synne) namely, from the golden calues at Bethel and at Dan. And the LORDE sayde vnto Iehu: Because thou hast bene wyllinge to do that which was righte in my sighte, a hast done vnto Achabs house all that was in my hert, \*therfore shall thy children syt vpon § seate of Israel vnto the fourth generacion.

Neuerthelesse Iehu was not diligent to walke in the lawe of the LORDE God of Israel with all his hert: for he lefte not of frö the synnes of Ieroboam which made Israel to synne. At the same time beganne the LORDE to be greued at Israel. 'For Hasael smote them in all the borders of Israel from Iordane Eastwarde, and all the londe Gilead of the Gaddites, Rubenites and Manassytes, from Aroer that lyeth on the ryuer by Arnon, and Gilead and Basan.

What more there is to saye of Iehu, and all that he dyd, and all his power, beholde, it is wryten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. The tyme that Iehu reigned ouer Israel, is eight and twentye yeares at Samaria.

The ri. Chapter.

A THALIA the mother of Ochosias, whā she sawe that hir sonne was deed, "gat her vp, and destroyed all the kynges sede. But Ioseba kynge Iorams doughter the syster of Ochosias, toke Ioas the sonne of Ochosias and stale him awaye with his norse in the chamber from amonge the kynges children which were slayne, and she hyd him from Athalia, so that he was not slayne. And he was hyd with her in the house of the LORDE sixe yeares. But Athalia was quene in the londe.

<sup>6</sup>Neuertheles in the seuenth yeare sent Ioiada, and toke the rulers ouer hūdreds with the captaynes and fote men, and caused thē to come to him in to the house of the LORDE and made a couenaunt with them, and toke an ooth of them in the house of the LORDE, and shewed them the kynges sonne, and comaunded them, and sayde: This is it that ye shall do: One thirde parte of you which enter on the Sabbath, shall kepe the watch in the kynges house, and one thyrde parte shal be at the porte of Sur, and one thirde parte shal be at  $\mathring{y}$  porte which is behynde the fote men, and ye shal kepe the watch at the house of Massa. But two partes of you all that go of on the Sabbath, shal kepe the watch in the house of the LORDE aboute the kinge and ye shall get you rounde aboute  $\mathring{y}$  kynge and euery one with his weapen in his hande: and who so euer cometh within  $\mathring{y}$  wall, let him die, so that ye be with the kinge, wha he goeth out and in.

And the rulers ouer the hundreds dyd all as Ioiada the prest had commaūded them, and toke vnto them their men which entred vpon the Sabbath, with those that wente of on the Sabbath, and came to Ioiada y prest. And the prest gaue the captaynes speares and shyldes which had bene kynge Dauids, and were in the house of the LORDE. And the fote men stode aboute the kynge, euery one with his weapen in his hande, fro the corner on the righte syde of the house vnto the corner of the lefte syde, euen vnto the altare and to the house. And he broughte forth the kynges sonne, and set a crowne vpon his heade, and toke the ‡ witnes, and made him kynge, and they were glad, and clapped their handes together, and sayde: God saue the kynge.

And whan Athalia herde the noyse of the C people that ranne together, she came to the people in to the house of the LORDE, and loked, and beholde, the kynge stode by the piler, as the vse was, and the syngers and tropettes by the kynge: and all the people of y lode were glad, and blewe with trompettes. But Athalia rente hir clothes, g sayde: Vproure, vproure. Neuertheles Ioiada y prest commaunded v rulers ouer hundreds, which were appointed ouer the hoost, and saide vnto them: Brynge her without the wall, and whosoeuer foloweth hir, let him dye of the swerde (for the prest had sayde, that she shulde not dye in the house of the LORDE.) And they layde handes vpo her, and she wente in by the waye where the horses go in to y kynges house, and there was she slayne.

Then made Ioiada<sup>d</sup> a couenaunt betwene  $\mathbf{B}$  the LORDE and the kynge, and the people,  $\dot{\mathbf{y}}$ they shulde be the people of the LORDE. Likewyse also betwixte the kynge and y people. Then wente all the people of the londe in to the house of Baal, and brake downe his altares, and destroyed his ymages right well. And Mathan the prest of Baal slewe they before the altare : And the prest, appoynted the officers in the house of the LORDE, and toke the rulers ouer hundreds, and the captaynes, and the fote men, and all y people of the londe, a broughte the kynge downe from the house of the LORDE, and came the waye from the porte of the fote men vnto the kynges house, and he sat vpon the kynges seate. And all the people of the lode were glad, and the cite was at rest. As for Athalia, they slewe her with the swerde in y kynges house. And Ioas was seuen yeare olde, whan he was made kynge.

The rij. Chapter.

A In the seucth years of Iehu, was Ioas made kynge," and reigned fortye years at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Zibea of Bersaba. And Ioas dyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE, as longe as Ioiada $ prest taught him. But they put not downe $ hye places: for the people offred g brent incense yet vpon the hye places.

And Ioas sayde vnto the prestes: All the money that is sanctified to be bestowed vpō  $\mathring{y}$ house of the LORDE, namely the money  $\mathring{y}$ euery man geueth vnto the treasury, and  $\mathring{y}$ money that euery man geueth for his soule, and all the money that euery man geueth of a fre hert, to be bestowed on the house of the LORDE, let the prestes take it vnto them, euery one his porcion: with that shall they repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE, where they fynde that there is eny decaye.

But whan § prestes repayred not the decaye in the house vnto the thre and twëtieth yearc of kynge Ioas, Ioas the kynge called Ioiada the prest with the other prestes, and sayde vnto them: Wherfore do ye not repayre the decaye in the house?

Therfore shall ye not take the money vnto you now enery one his porcion, but shall geue it to the decaye of the house. And the prestes agreed to take no money of the people, and to repayre the decaye of the house.

遇

Then Ioiada the prest toke a chest, and bored an hole aboue therin, and set it on the righte hande besyde the altare, at the entrynge in to the house of the LORDE. And the prestes that kepte the thresholde, put all the money therin that was broughte vnto the house of the LORDE. Whan they sawe then that there was moch money in the chest, \*ÿ kynges scrybe came vp with the hye prest, and bounde the money together, and tolde it as moch as was founde in the house of the And so the ready money was LORDE. geuen vnto them that wrought and were appoynted to the house of the LORDE, and they gaue it forth to the carpenters and to the that buylded and wroughte in the house of the  $| \mathfrak{C}$ LORDE, namely, to the dawbers and masons, and to them that boughte tymber and fre stone, to repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE and all that they founde to haue nede of repayringe in the house.

Howbeit there were no syluer chargers, flat peces, basens, trompettes, ner eny other vessell of golde and syluer made on the house of the LORDE, of the money that was brought vnto the LORDES house: but it was geuen vnto the workmen to repayre the decaye in the house of the LORDE therwith. The men also that the money was delyuered vnto, for to geue the workmen, neded not to make eny acomptes, but did their busynes vpon credence. But the money of trespace offerynges and synneofferynges was not broughte vnto the house of the LORDE: for it was the prestes.

At the same tyme wente Hasael the kynge of Syria vp, and foughte agaynst Gath, and wanne it. And whan Hasael set his face to go vp to Ierusalem, kynge Ioas toke all that was sanctifyed, which his fathers Iosaphat, Ioram and Ochosias the kynges of Iuda had halowed, and what he himselfe had sanctifyed, and all the golde that was founde in the treasures of the house of the LORDE, and in the kynges house, and sent it vnto Hasael the kynge of Syria. And so he departed from Ierusalem.

What more there is to saye of Ioas, and all that he dyd, it is written in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And his seruauntes made insurreccion and conspyred, and smote him in the house of Millo, at the goynge

TN *XXIII. yeare of Ioas the sonne of Ochosias kynge of Iuda, was Ioahas the sonne of Iehu kynge ouer Israel at Samaria, seuentene yeare : dyd y which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and walked after the sinnes of Ieroboam y sonne of Nebat (which caused Israel to synne) and lefte not of from them. And v wrath of the LORDE waxed whote vpon Israel, a he delyuered them ouer vnder the hande of Hasael kynge of Syria, and vnder the hande of Benadad the sonne of Hasael, as longe as they lyued.

And Ioahas besoughte the face of the LORDE. And the LORDE herde him, for he consydered the myserie of Israel, how the kynge of Syria oppressed them. And v LORDE gaue Israel a sauioure, which broughte them out of the power of the Syrians, so y the children of Israel dwelt in their tentes, like as afore tyme.

Yet lefte they not from the synnes of the house of Ieroboam, which caused Israel to synne, but walked in them. The groue at Samaria stode styll also. For of the people of Ioahas there were no mo lefte, but fyftye horsmen, ten charettes, and ten thousande fote men : * for the kynge of Syria had destroyed them, and made them as the dust in the barne.

What more there is to saye of Ioahas, and all that he dyd, and his power, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Ioahas fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buried in Samaria, g Ioas his sonne was kinge in his steade.

In the seuen and thirtieth yeare of Ioas kynge of Iuda, was Ioas the sonne of Ioahas kynge ouer Israel at Samaria sixtene yeare. And he dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and departed not from all the synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, which made Israel for to synne, but walked in them. What more there is to saye of Ioas, and what he dyd, a his power, how he foughte with Amasias kynge of Iuda, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Ioas fell on slepe with his fathers, and Ieroboam sat vpõ his seate. And Ioas was buried in Samaria with the kynges of Israel.

As for Eliseus, he fell in to a sicknes, wherof he dyed. And Ioas the kynge of Israel came downe vnto him, and wepte for him, and saide: † My father, my father, the charet man of Israel, and his horsmen. Eliseus sayde vnto him: Take the bowe and the arowes. And whan he had taken the bowe and the arowes, he sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: Bende the bowe with thine hande. And he bent it with his hade. And Eliseus laved his hande vpon the kynges hande, and sayde: Open that wyndowe towarde the East. And he opened it. And Eliseus saide : Shute. And he shot. He sayde: one arowe of the saluacion of the LORDE, one arowe of saluacio agaynst the Syrians: and thou shalt smyte the Syrians at Aphek, tyll they be brought to naughte.

And he sayde: Take y arowes. And wha he had taken them, he sayde vnto the kynge of Israel: Smyte the earth. And he smote thre tymes and stode still. Then was the mā of God wroth at him, and sayde: Yf thou haddest smytten fyue or sixe times, thou shuldest haue smytten y Syrians, tyll thou haddest vtterly brought them to naughte. But now shalt thou smyte them thre tymes.

Whan Eliseus was deed and buried, the E men of warre of the Moabites fell in to the londe the same yeare. And it fortuned y they buryed a certaine man. But wha they sawe the men of warre, they cast the man in to Eliseus graue. ‡ And whan he was therin, and touched Eliseus bones, he reuyued, and stode vpon his fete.

So Hasael the kynge of Syria oppressed Israel, as longe as Ioahas lyued. But the LORDE was gracious vnto them, and had mercy vpon them, and turned him to them for his couenauntes sake, with Abraham, Isaac and Iacob, and wolde not destroye the §nether dyd he cast them out from his presence vnto this houre.

And Hasael the kinge of Syria dyed, and Benadad his sonne was kynge in his steade. But Ioas turned backe, and toke out of the hande of Benadad the sonne of Hasael the cyties which he had take in battaill out of the

1 N the seconde years of Ioas y sonne of Ioahas kynge of Israel, was Amasias the sonne of Ioas kynge of Iuda made kynge: *fyue and twenty yeare olde was he, whan he was made kynge, a reigned nyne and twentye yeare at Ierusalē. His mothers name was Ioadan of Icrusalem. And he dyd that which was righte in the sighte of the LORDE : yet not as his father Dauid, but euen as his father lous did so dyd he also: for y hye places were not put downe, but the people offred and brent incese yet upon the hye places. Now whan he had gotten the power of the kyngdome, he smote his serununtes t which had smytte the kynge his father : but the children of y deed slayers slewe he not, acordinge to y which is wrytte in the boke of the lawe of Moses, where the LORDE hath comaunded g sayde: The fathers shal not dye for the children, a the children shal not dye for the fathers: but euery one shal dye for his awne synne.

Ten thousande of the Edomites smote he 38 also in the Salt valley, and wanne Sela in battayll, and called it latheel vnto this daye. SThen sent Amasias messaungers vnto Ioas the sonne of Ioahas the sonne of Iehu kynge of Israel, sayenge : Come hither, let vs se one another. But Ioas V kynge of Israel sent: vnto Amasias the kynge of Iuda, sayenge : The hawthorne that is in Libanus, sent to the Ceder tre in Libanus, sayenge : Geue thy doughter vnto my sonne to wife. But a wylde beest of the felde ranne ouer & hawthorne, and trode it downe. Thou hast smytte the Falomites, therfore is thine hert waxen proude: Take the prayse, and byde at home: why stryuest thou for mysfortune, y thou mayest fall, and Iuda with the? Howbeit Amasias consented not. đ

Then wete loas the kynge of Israel vp, and they sawe one another, he and Amasias the kynge of Iuda at Beth Semes which lyeth in Inda. But luda was smytten before Israel, so that every one fled in to his tente. And Ioas the kynge of Israel toke Amasias the kynge of Iuda, the sonne of Ioas the sonne of Ochosias at Beth Semes, and came to Ierusalem, and brake downe y wall of Ierusalem from y porte of Ephraim vnto the corner porte, euen foure hundreth cubites loge : and toke all the golde and syluer, and ornamentes that were founde in the house of the LORDE, and in y treasures of the kynges house, a the children also to pledge, a departed agayne to Samaria.

What more there is to sale of Ioas, what he dyd, and of his power, a how he foughte with Amasias the kynge of Iuda, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Israel. And Ioas fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buried at Samaria amonge ŷ kynges of Israel. And Ieroboam his sonne was kynge in his steade.

But Amasias the sonne of Ioas kynge of D Iuda, lyued after the death of Ioas the sonne of Ioahas kynge of Israel, fiftene yeare. What more there is to saye of Amasias, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And they conspyred agaynst him at Ierusalem, but he fled vnto Lachis. And they sent after him vnto Lachis, and slewe him there. And they broughte him vpon horses, a he was buried at Ierusalem with his fathers in $ cite of Dauid. And all the people of Iuda toke Asarias in his sixtenth yeare, and made him kynge in steade of Amasias his father. He buylded ¶ Eloth, and broughte it agayne vnto Iuda, after that the kynge was fallen on slepe with, his fathers.

In the fyftenth years of Amasias the sonne of Ioas kynge of Iuda, was Ieroboam the sonne of Ioas kynge ouer Israel at Samaria, one and fortye yeare. And he dyd that which was euell in the sighte of the LORDE, and departed not from all the synnes of Ieroboam the sonne of Nebat, which caused Israel for to synne.

*He smote the Philistynes also vnto Gasa, and their borders, from the castels vnto the stronge cities.

In the fourth yeare of Ezechias kynge of Iuda<sup>a</sup> († was the seuenth yeare of Oseas the sonne of Ela kynge of Israel) came Salmanasar the kynge of Assiria vp agaynst Samaria, and layed sege vnto it, and wanne it after thre yeares in the sixte yeare of Ezechias, that is in the nyenth yeare of Oseas kynge of Israel, the was Samaria wonne. And the kynge of Assiria caried Israel awaye vnto Assiria, and set them at Halah and Habor by the water Gosan, and in the cities of the Meedes. And all because they herkened not vnto the voyce of the LORDE their God, and had transgressed his couenaunt: And as for all that Moses the serument of the LORDE had commaunded the, they had nether herkened vnto eny of those, ner done them.

C In the fourteth yeare of kynge Ezechias dyd Sennacherib y kynge of Assiria ' come vp agaynst all the stronge cities of Iuda,  $\alpha$ Then sent Ezechias the kynge cõquered the. of Iuda to y kynge of Assiria vnto Lachis, sayenge: I have offended, turne back fro me: loke what thou layest vnto me, I wil beare it. The the kynge of Assiria layed vnto Ezechias the kynge of Iuda, thre hundreth talentes of syluer, a thirtie talentes of golde. + So Ezechias gaue all y syluer y was foude in y house of the LORDE, g in the treasures of § kynges house. At y same tyme brake Ezechias the kynge of Iuda the dores of the teple of § LORDE, a the plates of golde which he him selfe had caused to laye ouer the, a gaue the vnto the kynge of Assiria.

And the kynge of Assiria sent Thartan, and the chefe chamberlayne,  $\mathfrak{g}$  the chefe butler from Lachis to kynge Ezechias with a greate power vnto Ierusalem. And they wete vp: and whan they came there, they stode styll at the condyte by the ouer pole, which lyeth in the waye vpo the fullers londe, and called vnto the kynge. The came there forth vnto them Eliachim the sonne of Helchias the stewarde, and Sobna the scrybe,  $\mathfrak{g}$  Ioah the sonne of Assaph the Secretary.

And the chefe butler sayde vnto thē: Tell kynge Ezechias: Thus sayeth ý greate kynge, euē the kynge of Assiria: What presumpcion is this ý thou trustest vnto? Thinkest thou, ý thou hast yet councell and power to fighte? Where vnto trustest thou then, that thou art fallen of fro me? Beholde, puttest thou thy trust in this broken staffe of rede, in Egipte? which who leaneth vpon, it shall go in to his hande,  $\mathfrak{g}$  pearse it thorow. Euen so is Pharao the kynge of Egipte vnto all them that put their trust in him. But yf ye wolde saye vnto me: We put oure trust in  $\mathfrak{F}$  LORDE oure God. Is not that he, whose hye places and altares Ezechias hath takë downe, and sayde vnto Iuda and Ierusalē: Before this altare which is at Ierusalē, shal ye worshippe?

Make a multitude now therfore vnto my lorde the kynge of Assiria, and I wil geue ytwo thousande horses, let se yf thou be able to man them: how wilt thou then endure before the smallest prynce of my lordes subiectes? And trustest thou vnto Egipte because of the charettes and horsmen? But thinkest thou that I came vp hither without y LORDE to destroye these cities? The LORDE hath commaunded me: Go vp in to that londe and destroye it.

Then sayde Eliachim the sonne of Helchia g Sobna and Ioah vnto the chefe butler: Speake to thy seruauntes in the Syrias language, for we vnderstonde it, and speake not vnto vs in the Iewes speche before the eares of the people that are vpon the wall. Neuertheles y chefe butler sayde vnto thē: Hath my lorde then sent me vnto thy lorde, or to the, to speake these wordes? Yee even vnto the men, which syt vpon the wall, that they maye eate their owne donge and drynke their owne stale with you. So the chefe butler stode and cried with loude voyce in the Iewes language, and spake and sayde: Heare the worde of the greate kynge the kynge of Assiria. Thus sayeth the kynge: Let not Ezechias disceaue you, for he is not able to delyuer you. fro my hade: g let not Ezechias make you to trust in the LORDE, sayenge: The LORDE shall delyuer vs, and this cite shal not be geuen in to the handes of y kynge of Assiria. Then came Eliachim the sonne of Helchia  $\S$  stewarde, and Sobna the scrybe, and Ioah the sonne of Assaph the Secretary vnto Ezechias with rente clothes, and tolde him the wordes of the chefe butler.

The rir. Chapter.

WHAN Ezechias y kynge herde this, "he 1 rente his clothes, g put on a sackcloth, g wente in to y house of the LORDE, g sent Eliachim the stewarde g Sobna the Scrybe with the Eldest prestes, clothed in sack cloth, vnto the prophet Esay y sonne of Amos, g they saide vnto him: Thus sayeth Ezechias: This is a daye of trouble,  $\alpha$  of defiaunce  $\alpha$ blasphemy. And whan y chefe butlar came agayne, he founde the kynge of Assiria fightinge agaynst Libna: for he had herde that he was departed from Lachis. And he herde of Taracha the kynge of the Morians: Beholde, be is gone forth to fighte with the. Then turned he back, a sent messaungers to Ezechias, a caused to save vnto him: Let not thy God disceaue the, on whom thou trustest a sayest: Ierusalem shal not be geue in to the hade of the kynge of Assiria. Beholde, thou hast herde what the kynges of Assiria haue done vnto all londes, a how they daned them, a shalt thou be delyuered? But now O LORDE helpe thou vs. out of his hande, that all the kyngdomes vpon earth maye knowe, that thou LORDE art God alone.

Then sent Esay the sonne of Amos vnto Ezechias, sayenge: Thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: Where as thou hast made thy prayer vnto me concernynge Sennacherib ÿ kynge of Assiria, I haue herde it. MANASSES was twolue yeare olde, whan he was made kinge, "and reigned fyue and fyftye yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers nume was Hephziba. And he dyd that which was euell in $ sight of the LORDE (euen after the abhominacios of the Heithen, whom the LORDE expelled before the children of Israel) and waxed frowarde, and builded vp the hyce places which his father Ezechias had destroyed," and sett vp Baals altares, and made groues (as Achab the kynge of Israel dyd) and worshipped all the hoost of heauen, and served them. And buylded altares in the LORDES house, wherof the LORDE sayde: I wyll set my name at Ierusalem. And in both the courtes of the house of the LORDE buylded he altares vnto all the hoost of heauē. And 's caused his sonne to go thorow the fyre, and regarded byrdescryenge and tokens, and maynteyned soythsayers, and expounders of tokens, and so moch dyd he of this which was euell in the sight of the LORDE, that he prouoked him vnto wrath.

A groue Idol also which he had made, set he in the house, wherof the LORDE sayde vnto Dauid and to Salomon his sonne: In this house, and at Ierusalem (Iwhich I haue chosen out of all the trybes of Israel) wil I set my name for euer, and wyl not cause  $\hat{y}$  fote of Israel to be remoued eny more from the londe, which I gaue vnto their fathers, yee so that they obserue and do acordynge vnto all that I haue charged them, and after all the lawe that my seruaunt Moses comaunded them. Neuertheles they wolde not herken, but Manasses disceaued them, so  $\hat{y}$  they dyd worse then the Heithen, whom the LORDE expelled before  $\hat{y}$  children of Israel.

Then spake the LORDE by his seruauntes the prophetes, and saide: Because that Manasse the kynge of Iuda hath gone these abhominacions, which are worse then all y abhominacions that the Amorites haue done which were before them, and hath caused Iuda also to synne agaynst their God, therfore thus sayeth the LORDE God of Israel: ¶ Beholde, I wyll brynge soch a plage vpon C Ierusalem and Iuda, that who so euer heareth it, both his eares shal glowe, and ouer Ierusalem wyll I stretch forth the lyne of Samaria, and the weighte of the house of Achab, and wyll wype out Ierusalem, euen as one wypeth a platter, and I wyl ouerthrowe it. What more there is to saie of Manasses, and all that he dyd, and his synnes which he commytted, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And Manasses fell on slepe with his fathers, and was buried in the garden besyde his house, namely, in the garden of Vsa, and Amon his sonne was kynge in his steade.

<sup>a</sup> Two and twentye yeare olde was Amon whan he was made kynge, g he reigned two yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Mesumeleth, ŷ doughter of Harus of Iatba, and he dyd euell in the sighte of the LORDE, as Manasses his father had done, and walked in all the waye which his father walked, and serued the Idols which his father had serued, and worshipped them, and forsoke the LORDE the God of his father, and walked not in the waye of the LORDE.

And his seruauntes conspyred agaynst Amon, a slewe the kynge in his house. But the people of the londe slewe all them  $\frac{1}{2}$  had cospyred agaynst kynge Amon. And the people of the londe made Iosias his sonne kynge in his steade. As for other thinges that Amon dyd, beholde, they are wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And he was buried in his graue in Vsas gardē. And Iosias his sonne was kynge in his steade.

- B What more there is to saye of loachim, and all that he dyd, beholde, it is wrytten in the Cronicles of the kynges of Iuda. And loachim fell on slepe with his fathers. And † Ioachim his sonne was kynge in his steade. And the kynge of Egipte came nomore out of his londe: for the kynge of Babilon had conquered all that was the kynge of Egiptes, from the ryuer of Egipte vnto y water Euphrates. Eightene yeare olde was Ioachim whan he was made kynge, and reigned thre monethes at lerusale. His mothers name was Nebustha the doughter of Elnathan of Ierusalem. And he dyd cuell in the sighte of the LORDE, even as his father had done.

tAnd he toke forth fro thence all the treasure in the house of the LORDE, and in  $\mathring{y}$  kynges house, and brake all the golden vessell  $\mathring{y}$ Salomon the kynge of Israel had made in the house of the LORDE (acordynge as the LORDE had sayde) and caryed awaye all lerusalem, all the rulers, all the mightie men, cuen ten thousande presoners, and all the carpenters, and all the smithes, and lefte none behynde but the poore people of the londe.

D And he caryed Ioachim awaye vnto Babilon, and the kynges mother, the kinges wyues, and his chamberlaynes: and  $\hat{y}$  mightie men of the londe led he awaye presoners also from Ierusalem vnto Babilon, and seuen thousande

∅ One and twentye yeare olde was Sedechias, whan he was made kynge, and reigned eleuen yeare at Ierusalem. His mothers name was Amithal the doughter of Ieremia of Libna. And he dyd euell in the sight of the LORDE, euē as Ioachim dyd: for thus fortuned it vnto Ierusalē thorow the wrath of the LORDE, tyll he had cast them out frö his presence. And Sedechias fell awaye frö the kynge of Babilon.

ND it fortuned, that in  $\frac{1}{2}$  nyenth yeare  $\mathfrak{A}$ of his reigne, 'vpon the tenth daye of the tenth moneth, Nabuchodonosor the kynge of Babilon came with all his power agaynst Ierusalem. And they laied sege vnto it, and buylded stronge holdes rounde aboute it. Thus was the cite beseged vnto the eleventh yeare of kynge Sedechias. But on y nyenth daye of the fourth moneth was the honger so stronge in the cite, that the people of the londe had nothinge to eate. And the cite was broken vp, g all the men of warre fled in the night by the waye of the porte betwene the two walles, which goeth to the kynges gardē. But the Caldees laye aboute the cite. And he fled by the waye to the playne felde. Neuertheles the power of the Caldees folowed after the kynge, and toke him in the plaine felde of Iericho: and all the men of warre that were with him, were scattered abrode from And they toke the kynge, and led him, him. vp to the kynge of Babilon vnto Reblatha. "And he gaue iudgmet vpon him. And they slewe Sedechias children before his eyes, and put out Sedechias eies, and bounde him with cheynes, and caryed him vnto Babilon.

Vpon the seventh daye of the fyfth moneth, that is the ninetenth yeare of Nabuchodonosor kynge of Babilon, came Nabusaradan the chefe captayne the kynge of Babilons seruaunt, vnto lerusalem, and brent  $\hat{y}$  house of the LORDE, and the kynges house, g all the houses at Ierusalem, and all the greate houses brent he with fyre. 3 THE Philistynes foughte agaynst Israel. "And they of Israel fled before the Philistynes, and y wounded fell vpon mount Gilboa. And the Philistynes folowed vpon Saul and his sonnes, and smote Ionathas, Abinadab and Malchisua y sonnes of Saul. And the battayll was sore agaynst Saul. And the archers came vpon him, so that he was wounded of the archers. Then sayde Saul vnto his weapenbearer: Drawe out thy swerde, and thrust it thorow me, that these vncircumcysed come not, and deale shamefully with me. Neuertheles his weapenbearer wolde not, for he was sore afrayed. Then toke Saul his swerde, and fell therin. Whan his weapenbearer sawe that Saul was deed, he fell vpon his swerde also, and dyed.

Thus died Saul and his thre sonnes, and all his housholde together. And whan the men of Israel which were in y valley, sawe, that Saul and his sonnes were deed, they lefte their cities and fied: and the Philistynes came and dwelt therin.

33 On the morowe came the Philistynes to spoyle the slayne, and founde Saul, and his sonnes lyenge vpon mount Gelboa, and stryped him out, and toke his heade, and his harnesse, and sent it aboute in to ŷ londe of the Philistynes, and caused it to be shewed before their Idoles and the people. And his weapens layed they in the house of their god, and styckte vp his heade vpon the house of Dagon.

But whan all they of Iabes in Gilead herde of euery thinge, that the Philistynes had done vnto Saul, they gat them vp (as many as were men of armes) and toke the body of Saul and of his sonnes, and broughte them vnto Iabes, and buryed their bones vnder the Oke at Iabes, and fasted seuen dayes.

Thus dyed Saul in his trespace which he commytted agaynst the LORDE, because the kepte not the worde of the LORDE: to because he axed councell at the soythsayer, and axed not at the LORDE, therfore slewe he him, of turned the kyngdome vnto Dauid.

The ríj. Chapter.

ND all Israel resorted to Dauid vnto Hebron, 'and sayde: Beholde, we are thy bone and thy flesh. And afore tyme whan Saul reigned, thou leddest Israel out and in. So the LORDE thy God hath sayde vnto the: Thou shalt kepe my people of Israel, and thou shalt be the prynce ouer my people of Israel. And all the Elders of Israel came to the kynge vnto Hebron. And Dauid made a couenaunt with them at Hebron before the LORDE. And they anoynted Dauid to be kynge ouer Israel § acordynge to the worde of the LORDE by Samuel.

And Dauid and all Israel wete vnto Ierusalem, that is Iebus: for the Iebusites dwelt in the lode. And the citesyns of lebus saide vnto Dauid: Thou shalt not come in Howbeit Dauid wane y castell of hither. Sio, which is $ cite of Dauid. And Dauid sayde: ||who so euer smyteth y Iebusites first, shal be a prynce a captayne. The loab y sonne of Zeruia clymmed vp first, a was made captayne. This dyd the thre Worthies.

Abisai the brother of Ioab, he was the chefest amonge thre. And he lifte vp his speare, and smote thre hundreth. And he was famous amonge thre, and before the thirde, more honorable then the two, yet came he not vnto the thre.

Benaia the sonne of Ioiada the sonne of Ishail of Cabzeel, <sup>b</sup>was a man of greate actes. He smote two lyons of the Moabites. And he wente downe, and smote a lyon in the myddes of a well in the tyme of snowe. He smote a man of Egipte also, which was fyue cubites greate of stature, and had in his hande a speare like a weuers lome. Yet wente he downe to him with a staffe, and toke the speare out of his hande, and slewe him with his awne speare. This dyd Benaia the sonne of Ioiada, and was a famous man amonge thre Worthies, and most awncient amonge thirtie. But vnto the thre came he not. Howbeit Dauid made him of his secrete councell.

The valeaunt Worthies are these: Asahel the brother of Ioab, Elhanam his Vncles sonne of Bethleem, Samoth the Harodite, Helez the Pelonite, Ira the sonne of Ekes the Thecoite, Abraser the Anathothite, Sibechai the Husathite, Ilai the Ahohite, Matherai the Netophatite, Heled y sonne of Baena y Netophatite, Ithai y sonne of Ribai of Gibeath of the childre of Ben Iamin, Benaia the Pirgathonite, Hura of the broke of Gaas. also and of Iuda vnto the castell of Dauid.
But Dauid wente forth vnto them, and answered and sayde vnto them: Yf ye come to me in peace, and to helpe me, my hert shal be with you. But yf ye come vpō disceate, and to be mine aduersaries (where as there is yet no vnrighte in me) the God of oure fathers loke vpon it, and rebuke it. Neuertheles the sprete endued Amasai the captayne amonge thirtie, and he sayde: We are thine O Dauid, and holde with the thou some of Isai. Peace, peace be with the, peace be with thy helpers, for thy God helpeth the. Then Dauid receaued them, and made them captaynes ouer the men of warre.

And of Manasses there fell certaine vnto Dauid, whan he came to the battayll with the Philistynes agaynst Saul, and helped them not, *for the prynces of y Philistynes counceled to let him go from them, and sayde: Yf he fell vnto his lorde Saul, it mighte cost vs oure neckes. Now what he departed vnto Siclag, there fell vnto him of Manasses, Adna, losabad, Iediael, Michael, Iosabad, Elihu, Zilthai, heades ouer thousandes in Manasses. And they helped Dauid against the men of warre: for they were all valeaunt Worthies, and were captaynes ouer the hoost. And euery daye came there some to Dauid, to helpe him, till there was a greate boost as an hoost of God.

And this is the nombre of the heades harnessed vnto the warre, which came to Dauid vnto Hebron, for to turne the kyngdome of Saul vnto him, acordynge to the worde of the LORDE.

The childrē of Iuda, which handled speares Band swerdes, were sixe thousande, g eight hundreth ready harnessed vnto  $\hat{y}$  warre. Of the children of Simeon noble men of armes for the battayll, seuen thousande and an hūdreth. Of the children of Leui foure thousande and sixe hundreth. And Ioiada the prynce amonge them of Aaron with thre thousande and seuen hundreth. Sadoc the yonge valeaunt man of armes with his fathers house, two and twentye rulers. Of the children of Ben Iamin Sauls brother, thre thousande: for vnto that time helde many of thē yet with the house of Saul.

Of $ children of Ephraim, twentie thousande and eighte hundreth valeaunt men of armes, and famous in the house of their fathers. Of the halfe trybe of Manasses, eightene thousande, named by name, to come and make Dauid kynge. Of the children of Isachar (which were men of vnderstondynge, whan nede requyred to knowe what Israel shulde do) two hundreth captaynes, and all their brethren folowed their worde. Of Sabulon, soch as wente forth in the hoost to $ warre, ready with all maner of weapens for the battayll, fyftye thousande, beynge of one mynde to kepe them selues in ordre.

Of Nephtali, a thousande captaynes,  $\mathfrak{g}$  with them soch as handled shylde and speare, seuen and thyrtie thousande. Of Dan, ready harnessed to the battayll, eight and twentye thousande, and sixe hundreth. Of Asser, soch as wente forth in  $\mathfrak{g}$  hoost, ready harnessed to the battayll, fortye thousande. Mules and oxen to eate: meel, fyges, rasens, wyne, oyle, oxen, shepe, very many: for there was ioye in Israel.

The riff. Chapter.

ND Dauid helde a councell<sup>a</sup> with the captaynes ouer thousandes and ouer hundreds, and with all the prynces, and sayde vnto all the congregacion of Israel: Yf it lyke you, and yf it be of the LORDE oure God, let vs sende forth on euery syde to oure other brethren in all the countrees of Israel, and to the prestes and Leuites in the cities where they haue suburbes,  $\dot{y}$  they maye be gathered together vnto vs, and let vs fetch the Arke of oure God agayne vnto vs: for by Sauls tyme we axed after it. The sayde the whole cogregacion, that the same shulde be done, for it pleased all the people well.

So Dauid gathered all Israel together from Sihor of Egipte, tyll a man come vnto Hemath, to fetch the Arke of God from Kiriath Iearim. And Dauid wente vp with all Israel to Kiriath Iearim, which lieth in Iuda, to brynge from thence the Arke of God the LORDE, that sytteth vpō the Cherubins, where the name is named: and they caused the Arke of God to be caried vpō a new cart from the house of Abinadab.

Vsa and his brethren droue the cart. As for Dauid and all Israel, they played with all their strength before God, with songes, with harpes, with psalteries, with tabrettes, with Cymbales and trompes.

But whan they came to the barne floore of Chidon, Vsa stretched out his hande to holde the Arke: for the oxen wente out asyde. Then waxed the wrath of the LORDE fearce ouer Vsa, a smote him, because he stretched out his hade to the Arke, so y he dyed there before God. Thē was Dauid sory, because v LORDE had made soch a rente vpo Vsa, and called the place Perez Vsa, vnto this daye. And Dauid stode in feare of God the same daye, a sayde: How shal I brynge § Arke of God vnto me? Therfore wolde he not let y Arke of God be broughte vnto him in to v cite of Dauid, but caried it in to y house of Obed Edom the Gathite. So the Arke of God abode with Obed Edom in his house thre monethes. And y LORDE blessed Obed Edoms house and all that he had.

The rb. Chapter. A ND Hiram ŷ kynge of Tyre' sent messaungers vnto Dauid and Cedre tymber, and masons and carpenters, to buylde him an house. And Dauid perceaued, that the LORDE had confirmed him kynge ouer Israel: for his kyngdome increased for his people of Israels sake. And Dauid toke yet mo wyues at Ierusalem, g begat yet mo sonnes g doughters. And the names of them ŷ were borne vnto him at Ierusalem, are these: Sammua, Sobab, Nathan, Salomon, Iebehar, Elisua, Elipalet, Noga, Nepheg, Iaphia, Elisamma, Baal Iada, Eliphalet.

And whan the Philistynes herde that Dauid 13 was anoynted kynge ouer all Israel, they wente vp all to seke Dauid. Whan Dauid herde that, he wente forth agaynst them. And the Philistynes came, and scatered the selues beneth in 🕏 valley of Rephaim. And Dauid axed councell at God, g sayde: Shal I go vp agaynst the Philistynes? and wilt thou delyuer them in to my hande? The LORDE sayde vnto him: Go vp, and I wil delyuer them in to thy hande. And whan they were gone vp to Baal Prasim, Dauid smote them there. And Dauid sayde: God hath deuyded myne enemies thorow my hande, euen as the water parteth asunder: therfore called they the place Baal Prasim. And there lefte they their goddes. Then * commaunded Dauid to burne them with fyre.

But the Philistynes gat them thither agayne, and 'scattered them selues beneth in  $\psi$  valley. And Dauid axed councell at God agayne. And God sayde vnto him: Thou shalt not go vp behynde them, but turne the from them, that thou mayest come vpon the ouer agaynst the Peertrees. So whan thou hearest aboue vpon the Peertrees the noyse of the goynge, go thou forth then to the batayll: for God is gone forth then before the to smyte the hoost of the Philistynes. And Dauid dyd as God commaunded him. And they smote the hoost of the Philistynes from Gibeon forth vnto Gaser. And Dauids name was noysed out in all londes. And the LORDE caused \$ feare of him to come vpo all the Heythen.

Of the children of Vsiel: Amminadab the chefe, with his brethren, an hūdreth and twolue.

And Dauid called Sadoc and Abiathar the prestes, and the Leuites, namely Vriel, Asaia, loeli, Semaia, Eliel, Aminadab, and sayde vnto them: Ye are the heades of $ fathers amonge the Leuites: sanctifye youre selues therfore a youre brethre, y ye maye brynge vp the Arke of the LORDE God of Israel, to the place y I have prepared for it. + For nfore whan ye were not there, the LORDE oure God made a rent amonge vs, because we soughte him not, as we shulde haue done. So y prestes a the Leuites halowed the selues, y they mighte brynge vp the Arke of the LORDE God of Israel. And the children of Leui bare the Arke of God the LORDE ypon their shulders with the staues theron, no- Moses comaunded acordinge to y worde of the LORDE.

Vad Dauid spake vnto ÿ rulers of ÿ Leuites, that they shulde ordeyne some of their brethren to be syngers with psalteries, harpes and loude transmunentes, and Cimbales, to synge loude with loye.

then the Leuites appoynted Heman  $\hat{y}$ some of loel: and of his brethren Assaph to some of Barachias: and of the children of Meran their brethren, Ethan the some of tream, and with them their brethren of the seconde course, namely Zacharias, Iaesiel, Semiramoth, Iehiel, Vnni, Eliab, Benaia,

For Heman, Assaph and Ethan were syngers, with brasen belles makynge a loude noyse: but Zacharias, Iaesiel, Semiramoth, Iehiel, Vnni, Eliab, Maeseia g Benaia with Phalteries to Alamoth: Mathithia, Elipheleia, Mikneia, Obed Edom, Ieiel g Asasia with harpes to synge aboue them on hye. Chenania the ruler of the Leuites was the master of Musick to teach them for to synge, for he was a man of vnderstondinge.

And Barachias and Elcana were the dorekepers of the Arke. But Sachania, Iosaphat, Nathaneel, Amasai, Zacharias, Benaia, Elieser the prestes, blewe the trompettes before § Arke of God. And Obed Edom and Iehia were dorekepers of the Arke.

So Dauid and the Elders of Israel, and the Edgravity of the couenaunt of the LORDE out of the house of Obed Edom with ioye. ## The rir. Chapter.

A FTER this smote Dauid the Philistynes, and subdued them, " and toke Gath a the vyllages thereof out of the hande of the Philistynes. He smote the Moabites likewyse, so that the Moabites were subdued vnto Dauid, and gaue him trybute. He smote Hadad Eser also § kynge of Zoba in Hemath, whan he wente to set vp his power by the water Euphrates.

And Dauid toke from him a thousande charettes, seuen thousande horsmen, and twētye thousande fote men. And Dauid lamed all the charettes, and kepte an hundreth charettes ouer. And the Syriās came from Damascon, to helpe Hadad Eser the kynge of Zoba. Howbeit Dauid smote two g twentie thousande of the same Syrians, and layed men of warre at Damascon in Syria, so that the Syrians were subdued vnto Dauid, and broughte him trybute. For the LORDE helped Dauid, whither so euer he wente.

And Dauid toke the shyldes of golde, y Hadad Esers seruaūtes had, g broughte thē to Ierusalē. And out of Tibehath g Chun the cities of Hadad Eser, toke Dauid very moch brasse, * wherof Salomon made the brasen lauer, and pilers, and brasen vessels.

<sup>6</sup>And whā Thogu the kynge of Hemath herde, ý Dauid had smytten all ý power of Hadad Eser, he sent his sonne Hadorā vnto kynge Dauid, to salute him  $\mathfrak{g}$  to blesse him, because he had foughtē with Hadad Eser,  $\mathfrak{g}$ smyttē hī (for Thogu had warre with Hadad Eser) and all the same vessels of golde, syluer and of brasse, dyd kynge Dauid consecrate vnto the LORDE, with the syluer and golde that he had taken from the Heythē, namely, from the Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, Philistynes, and Amalechites.

 C And Abisai the sonne of Zeru Ia smote eightene thousande<sup>c</sup> of the Edomites in the Salt valley, and layed mē of warre in Edomea, so that all the Edomites were subdued vnto Dauid: for ŷ LORDE helped Dauid, whither so euer he wente.

Thus Dauid reigned ouer all Israel, and executed iudgment and righteousnes vnto all the people. Ioab the sonne of Zeru Ia was captayne ouer the hoost. Iosaphat the sonne of Ahilud was Chaunceler. Sadoc the sonne of Achitob, and Ahimelech  $\mathring{y}$  sonne of Abiathar, were prestes. Sauesa was Scrybe. Benaia the sonne of Ioiada was ouer the Chrethians  $\mathfrak{g}$  Plethians.  $\ddagger$  And Dauids sonnes were chefe at  $\mathring{y}$  kynges hande.

The rr. Chapter.

ND after this dyed Nahas y kynge of a H the childre of Ammon, and his sonne was kynge in his steade. Then sayde Dauid: I wil do mercy vpon Hanun the sonne of Nahas, for his father dyd mercy vpon me: and so he sent messaungers to comforte him ouer his father. And wha Dauids seruauntes came in to the londe of the children of Ammon vnto Hanun to comforte him, the prynces of the children of Ammon sayde vnto Hanun: Thinkest thou that Dauid honoureth thy father in thy sighte, that he hath sent coforters vnto the? Yee his seruauntes are come vnto the, to search and to ouerthrowe, and to spye out the londe. Then toke Hanun the seruauntes of Dauid, and shoue them,  $\alpha$  cut the halfe of their garmentes of, euē by the loynes, a so let the go. And they wente their waye, a sent men to tell Dauid. Neuertheles he sent to 13 mete them (for y men were put to greate shame) and the kynge sayde: Abyde at Iericho, tyll youre beerdes be growne, and then come agayne.

Whan the childre of Ammon sawe, that they stynked in v sighte of Dauid, both Hanun and the children of Ammon sent a thousande taletes of syluer, to hyre charettes and horsmen out of Mesopotamia, out of Maecha and out of Zoba: and hyred two and thirtie thousande charettes, a y kynge of Maecha with his people, which came a pitched their tentes before Medba. And the children of Ammon gathered them selues together out of their cities, and came to the battayll. Whan Dauid herde that, he sent loab thither with all the hoost of the men of armes. And the childre of Ammon were gone forth, and prepared them selues to the battayll before the gate of the cite. But the kynges y were come, kepte them asyde in the felde.

Now wha Ioab sawe that the battayll was agaynst him both before and behynde, he chose of all the best yonge men in Israel, and prepared him selfe agaynst y Syrians. As for y residue of the people, he put them vnder the hande of Abisai his brother, that they shulde prepare them selues agaynst the children of Ammon, and he sayde: Yf y Syrias be to mightie for me, helpe thou me: but yf the childre of Ammon be to stroge for ŷ, I shall helpe the : take a good corage vnto the, and let vs quyte oure selues manly for oure people and for the cities of oure God : neuertheles the LORDE do what pleaseth him. And loab made him forth with the people that was with him, to fighte agaynst § Syrians: a they fled before him. And whan the children of Ammon sawe y the Syrians fled, they fled also before Abisai his brother, and wente in to the cite. And Ioab came to Ierusalem.

But whan the Syrians sawe that they were Ð smytte before Israel, they sent messaungers, and broughte forth § Syrians which were beyonde the water. And Sophach the chefe captayne of Hadad Eser wente before them. Wha this was tolde Dauid, he gathered all Israel together, and wente ouer Iordane. And whan he came at them, he set y battayll in araye agaynst them. And Dauid prepared him selfe to  $\vartheta$  battayll agaynst  $\vartheta$  Syrians,  $\mathfrak{g}$  they foughte with him : but  $\vartheta$  Syrias fled before Israel. And Dauid slewe of the Syrians seuen thousande charettes, a fortye thousande fote men. And Sophach the chefe captayne slewe he also. And whan Hadad Esers seruauntes sawe that they were smytte before Israel, they made peace with Dauid a his seruauntes. And the Syrians wolde helpe the childre of Ammon nomore.

The pri. Chapter.

A ND whan y yeare came aboute, "what tyme as y kynges vse to go forth, Ioab broughte the power of the hoost, g destroyed the londs of the children of Ammon, and came and layed sege vnto Rabba. But Dauid abode at lerusalem. \*And Ioab smote Rabba, and brake it downe. And Dauid toke their kynges crowne from his heade, and founde the weighte of a talent of golde theron, g precious stones. And it was set vpö Dauids heade. And very moch spoyle caried he out of the cite. As for the people that were therin, he broughte the forth,  $\mathfrak{q}$  parted them in sunder with sawes,  $\mathfrak{q}$  hokes  $\mathfrak{q}$  betels of yron. Thus dyd Dauid vnto all  $\mathfrak{f}$  cities of the childre of Ammon. And Dauid departed againe, with the people vnto Ierusalem.

Afterwarde arose there warre at Gasar with B the Philistynes. Then Sibechai & Husathite smote Sibai, which was one of the children of Rephaim, and he subdued him. And there arose warre agayne with the Philistynes. The Elhamah y sonne of Iair smote Lahemi y brother of Goliath y Gathite, whose speares staff was like a weeuers lome. Afterwarde was there a battayll at Gath, where there was a man of a greate stature, y had sixe fyngers and sixe toes, which make foure and twentye. And he was borne also of Rapha, and spake despytefully vnto Israel. But Ionathas the sonne of Simea Dauids brother smote him. These were the childre of Rapha at Gath, a fell thorow y hande of Dauid, and of his seruauntes.

The rrij. Chapter.

A ND Sathan stode agaynst Israel, <sup>6</sup> g entysed Dauid to nombre Israel. And Dauid sayde vnto Ioab g to <sup>9</sup>/<sub>5</sub> rulers of the people : Go youre waye, nombre Israel from Berseba vnto Dan, and brynge me the nombre of thē, that I maye knowe it. Ioab sayde : The LORDE make his people an hundreth tymes mo then they are now. But my lorde O kynge, are they not all my lordes seruauntes? Why doth my lorde then axe therafter? Wherfore shal there a trespace come vpon Israel?

Neuertheles the kynges worde preuayled agaynst Ioab. And Ioab wente forth, and walked thorow all Israel, and came to Ierusalem, and delyuered vnto Dauid ŷ nombre of the people that was tolde. And of all Israel there were a thousande tymes a thousande, and an hundreth thousande men, that drue out the swerde: and of Iuda foure hundreth thousande and seuētye thousande men, which drue out the swerde. As for Leui and Ben Iamin, he nonbred them not amonge these: for the kynges worde was abhominable vnto Ioab.

But this displeased God righte sore: for he smote Israel. And Dauid sayde vnto God: I have synned greuously, that I have done this. But now take awaye the trespace of thy seruaunt: for I haue done very vnwysely. And the LORDE spake vnto Gad Dauids Seer, g sayde: Go speake to Dauid, g saye: Thus saieth the LORDE : Thre thinges lave I before the, chose  $\psi$  one of them,  $\psi$  I maye do it vnto the. And wha Gad came to Dauid, he spake vnto him: Thus sayeth the LORDE : Chose  $\psi$  ether thre years derth, or thre monethes to flye before thine aduersaries, g before the swerde of thine enemies, y it maye ouertake the: or thre dayes y swerde of the LORDE, a pestilece in the londe, y the angell of the LORDE maye destroye in all y coastes of Israel. Loke now what answere I shal geue vnto him y sent me. Dauid sayde vnto Gad: I am in greate trouble: yet wyl I rather fall in to y hande of the LORDE, for his mercy is exceedynge greate, g I wil not fall in to the handes of men.

 Then dyd the LORDE cause pestilence to come in to Israel, so that there fell of Israel thre score 𝔅 ten thousande mē. And God sent the angell to Ierusalē for to destroye it. And euen in the destruccion the LORDE considered, and he repēted of the euell, and sayde vnto the angell ŷ destroyer: It is ynough, holde now thy hande.
